IN THE GALLERY.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER, BY VANDYKE BROWNE.

I really have forgotten
The name the drama bore;
'Twas full of stirring action,
Of love, and something more;
With villains black as Hades,
With bolts and prison-locks—
I saw it from the gallery,
And you saw it from the box.

The Arab who was sitting
Directly at my right,
Pronounced the play "a banker,"
And said "a follier night!"
Had not been known this season;
And he'd "walked up his rookus"
To witness from the gallery
What you witnessed from the box.

Unless I am mistaken,
The hero of the play
Had squandered all his fortune
In a dubious sort of way;
And I could not choose but pity
One bereft of cash and stocks,
As I saw him from the gallery,
And saw you with the box.

Indeed, I fell to tracing
Some resemblance 'twixt the part
Which the player was portraying
And a drama—not of art—
Where the hero suffered keenly
From the force of Fortune's knocks,
And was fain to seek the gallery,
Where he once sat in the box.

And he found—this luckless actor—
In the drama men call life,
They who fawned before his fortune
Turned aside when storms were rife;
And the friends he counted staunchest
Failed him with his failing stocks—
Quite forgot him in the gallery,
Though they knew him in the box!

And to make the likeness stronger,
The lady in the play,
When she found her lover's fortune
Had bewinged itself away,
Very candidly informed him
She could marry brown-stone blocks,
But she could not choose the gallery
When she might select the box.

Did the scene awake no mem'ry,
O my lady proud and fair?
Was there nothing in the story,
Told amid the footlight glare,
That recalled a sadder drama—
One more full of sudden shocks—
With the hero in the gallery
And the lady in the box?

From my elevated station
Every word the players said
Sounded like a far-off echo
Of that drama that is dead.
It may all have been a fancy
Produced by sundry hocks,
Yet it seemed so in the gallery—
Did it seem so in the box?

A CRY FOR HELP.

...a border of a river, not ten miles distant ...Broken Rock, an emigrant had built his ...and with him a rosy-cheeked lass ...alled wife, and five buxom children.

...rs had come and gone, his farm of one sec- ...to six, his little family of five increased ...ed to nine, and the rosy wife was a robust ...hile Ben the farmer was the happiest ...s contented father, husband and hard- ...alled on the border of this Western river.

On the evening prior to the lynching the sky was clear, the stars shone brightly, and the moon shed its silver rays down upon the reflecting waters.

Some of the farmer's children were huddled together on the doorstep of the hut, counting the stars in the sky, and wondering what man's face was in the moon, when a heartrending cry for help struck upon their ears, and started them to their feet. A dark object was floating on the water.

"It's a big fish," said one.

"It's a piece of timber," cried a second.

"It's a human being!" exclaimed the eldest, as a dark cloud cleared away, and the light of the moon showed them a woman's form, clinging to the branch of a tree, while her cries for help became fainter and fainter.

Ben the farmer had heard the call for succor, and now stood straining his eyes towards the object on the river.

"My God!" cried the man, "it's a woman. My boat, boys! my boat!"

The boat, with a bottle of whiskey and a heavy blanket at the bottom, was safely launched, and soon was heard the splashing of the oars as he paddled across the water.

As Farmer Ben neared the old branch, he saw two white arms clasped around it. One splash more, and she will be saved. An exclamation of horror burst from his lips as the woman's arms loosened, and with a faint cry she sank to the bottom. Breathless and with a beating heart, did the man wait for her to rise to the surface. As luck would have it, she arose at the side of his boat. He lowered his strong arms into the water, gently lifted her into his skiff, and rowed back to the shore with the swiftness of a racer. His wife and children ran weeping into the house, and Ben, with the apparently dead body of the woman, followed. As soon as he reached the kitchen, where a large wood-fire was burning brightly, he laid his unconscious burden carefully on her right side, the face turned towards the ground, and then the jaws were slowly opened to facilitate the egress of the water. This process was alternated with another, but all efforts were without effect—the woman looked as if she had seen the last of earth. The good man wrapped her in two large blankets, and placed her on the table near the fire. Manipulation to induce respiration was now tried at intervals of about a quarter of a minute. At last he procured a piece of soft wood, which he introduced between her teeth to keep the mouth open, while his good wife busied herself in getting a copper warming-pan filled with hot water, which Ben passed in the outside of the blanket down the spinal column. This he alternated with a gentle friction of hot woolen mittens, while with her naked hands his wife rubbed the soles of the senseless one, as well as other portions of her body. These two big-souled creatures for twenty minutes followed up this process of rubbing, while the nine children sat silent and watching.

"At last!" said Ben. "A feeble sign of life!"

The manipulation was discontinued. Almost imperceptibly, the woman's chest rose and fell, and the effort showed indications of an attempt to vomit.

"Quick, wife, my quill pen!" cried Ben.

This wise farmer took the feathery end, and introduced it into the recumbent woman's throat, and this, to their delight, had the desired effect.

"Thank Heaven! we have saved her life!" they joyfully cried.

More warm blankets were wrapped around the patient, and she was carried to a soft bed, and left to repose. In this farmer's hut everything was in its place. All within was clean and neat. Mrs. Ben worked hard herself, and brought up her family to do likewise.

With the rising of the sun arose the big Bens and the little Bens, but the resuscitated stranger still slumbered, breathing naturally, on hercowch.

"We wont disturb her," said Ben to his wife. "She will awake when nature has done its work. Let us go to breakfast—for I have a hard day's work before me."

"How did she get into the water, I wonder? She don't belong to any family around the borders. Oh, dear, husband, if you wasn't as learned as you are, I guess the poor thing would never have come to. O Ben, Ben, my man! I was blessed the day I went to church with you."

The good woman threw her ruddy arms about the farmer's neck, and kissed him with the truest, purest lips that ever woman pressed against man's.

"Aye, I was blessed too, my girl."

Just then a voice was heard:

"Where am I?"

"Oh, you are awake, my dear," returned the wife, running to the bedside and assisting its occupant to rise. "Run and get a cup of coffee, Ben, and plenty of cream, mind. You are safe, my dear, quite safe," she added kindly, turning to the girl.

"Safe!" she murmured, gazing wonderingly around the room. "You are not my mother."

"No, dearey, I am not your mother—God bless your sweet face! I wish I were—but my good man here saved you from getting drowned last night."

"Aye;" and a pretty time we have had a-bringing you back to life again," put in the former cheerfully, offering her the coffee, which she clutched eagerly and drank without a word. "Don't you remember how you got there, my girl?" he added, arranging her long dark-brown hair with his brawny hand, with the gentlest touch imaginable.

For a moment, with a strange, wild, yet pitiful look, she pressed her head.

"Oh, where am I?" she cried out. "Is not this a dream, or am I mad, or dead?"

"No, no, my dearey, you are not mad, nor dead, but in a fair way of being restored to your natural health and strength again," encouragingly said Mrs. Ben.

Suddenly, to their surprise, the girl caught hold of both their hands, and drew them nearer to her.

"I dreamed last night that I was murdered," she said, "and I swore in that dream I'd live to be revenged."

With a piercing shriek, as if the terrible truth for the first time dawned upon her mind, she sprang from the couch, and screamed forth like one demented.

"'Tis no dream! Almighty Power of Heaven, as I was struggling in the dark waters, you heard my prayer. I live, I live! to be revenged!"

She threw her arms above her head, and fell senseless on the floor.

"O my Ben!" whispered his wife, "I fear we have saved a maniac."

"Nay, nay, wife," he said gently. "More like, somebody has tried to murder her. Go, get some thing to bring her to, and I'll warrant you will find out the whole truth before long."

"You are always right, my dear," she replied. "I'll get her a suit of Mary Ann's Sunday clothes right away; for, see, she is reviving of herself. Look after her, and I'll be back in a minute, for I know you must be dying for your breakfast."

Wrapping a blanket around her, old Ben placed her in a rocking-chair near the fire.

"There, lass; you shall have something good to eat and drink in a few minutes," he good-naturedly assured her, as he tucked her snugly up, lest a breath of wind might reach her.

She cast upon him a grateful look, pressed his hand to her lips, kissed it, burst into tears, and then, raising her eyes to his, asked in the sweetest voice:

"How can I ever repay you both for your kindness?"

"By coming to breakfast with my old woman, our nine children and myself," Ben answered in a trembling voice.

"Go, then," she said, with the saddest smile overspreading her face, "and tell your good lady I will be down without a word or two of notice

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ Letters seeking information replied to only through this department; no answers by mail.

SQUIB, Boston.—1. There is no disputing that if you reduce the amount to pence, multiply it by itself and divide the product by the square of the number of pence in a pound, the answer will be £134 9s. 3.49-240d.; nor can it be disputed that, multiplication being but a ready form of addition, if we collect £11 11s. 11d. from every one of eleven different persons, the total will be £127 11s. 1d. The only question is, is either process multiplying a given number of pounds, shillings and pence? Our position is the simple one that things which are unlike cannot be multiplied together connectedly by themselves, or rather by their own terms; and this you seem not unwilling to concede when you state that "you do not raise the question as to the possibility of multiplying pounds by shillings." As you say, there is a reason fully expressed; but this question, which began by our controverting the assertion that five cents cannot be multiplied by five cents—in other words, that things cannot be multiplied by their like, and that therefore we cannot, as well use the substantive "cent" as "times"—does not enter into equivalents at all.

NORTHUMBERLAND.—1. Our decision is correct. The opposing argument is fallacious, for the reason that in adding a deuce from his hand to a three on the board the player was not building at all, but combining. It is only the antagonist of the combiner who can build in the first instance, though in turn the combiner may build upon that build; but neither can use a card on the table to build with, either wholly or in part. On the contrary, it is impossible to combine, and leave the pile on the table to be taken up later, without using a card from your hand. 2. That work says simply that no card on the table can be used to build with. 3. Our decisions are right again. Regular euchre is one game, railroad euchre is quite another, and dominoe euchre is yet a third. Railroad euchre, like joker euchre in this respect, and also like spider euchre, is played with thirty-three cards.

BILLIARDS.—"1. Can a hotel billiard saloon be classed as a place of public resort? 2. Can the proprietor of such refuse the use of the tables to anyone other than disorderly persons? 3. Can the law providing redress against public houses be made to apply in the above case?".....1. Billiard-rooms, called public simply in contradistinction to the smaller affairs in private houses, are not places of public resort in the strict sense of that term. They are private enterprises, and in this State are not even licensed. 2. The proprietor may refuse to lease his tables to anyone he chooses. 3. We think not. But inasmuch as in the case of the Fifth-avenue Hotel in the BILLIARDS department of this paper we see our billiard columns as no precedent has been established in the courts with reference to all the issues submitted in "Billiards," we rational decline.

G. E. S., Washington.—1. At auction pitch a player cannot be set back who makes as many points as he refused to sell for. 2. The custom of the house, to be binding, should be known to all the players of the table, and should also be open to be accessible to them; for, however much captiousness is to be reprobated, the right to find fault with a house-custom that is opposed both to general custom and to common sense is unquestioned. Besides, it is as much the duty of a coterie to give a stranger timely notice of any peculiarities in their play, as it is that in courtesy he should defer to the practice of his brother sportsmen. 3. Of that question, as to having called "six," could not with a seven spot take in that "six" and also an ace lying on the table, I We presume you mean Wagner and Lovejoy, and we think the best way is to watch our amusement columns, and address them.

JAMES MCCAULEY, Brooklyn.—1. At the time of his fight with Tom Hyer, Yankee Sullivan kept a public house at No. 9 Chatham street. Shortly afterwards he removed to the southeast corner of Centre and Franklin streets, subsequently changing to 22 Chatham, where he was located at the period of his battle with John Morrissey. 2. Hyer was not engaged in the saloon business when he fought Sullivan, but soon after he entered it. 3. The New York Herald says: In the proprietorship of the Branch, No. 40 Bowery, where he received the troops of friends and admirers who called to see and congratulate the champion. A full description of exhibition appeared in the issue of Feb. 1, 1850. 4. Hicks the pirate was hung July 30, 1860. 5. The steamship Great Eastern first arrived at this port June 28, 1860.

READER.—1. Your questions have evidently been prompted by the perusal of a letter published in The Richmond Enquirer of March 23, concerning the burning of the Richmond Theatre on Thursday, Dec. 26, 1811; but you did not read it attentively, or you would have read: "It [referring to a new play then produced for the first time, the name of which we have forgotten] was a new Gallic play, translated by a gentleman of Richmond. The afterpiece was "The Bleeding Nun." "The Bleeding Nun" is a very old English melodrama, and long since out of print. The theatre was not burned on Dec. 27, as you say, but on Thursday, Dec. 26. The letter was dated Dec. 28, 1811, and that day fell on Saturday.

DUKE, Portsmouth.—1. The best runs by those players in the matches named were as follows: Philip Tieman, Sept. 15, 1864—139; Wm. Gouldthwait, Jan. 20, 1866—115; Emile Pery, Sept. 7, 1865—105; John McDevitt, March 15, 1866—95; John Deery, May 23, 1866—114. 2. Oct. 5, 1866, J. Dion scored 1500 to McDevitt's 1276; averages, 25.50-58 and 21.12-58; best runs—Dion, 258; McDevitt, 208. 3. June 10, 1867, Dion scored 1500 to McDevitt's 1264; averages, 25 and 10.66-75; best runs—Dion, 616; McDevitt, 220. 4. Dec. 11, 1867, Joseph Dion scored 1500 to McDevitt's 1264; averages, 15.6-114 and 13.8-114; best runs—McD'evitt, 181; Dion, 295. 5. E. M. B., Newport.—1. If he said "Will you pay your bet if you bet" and nothing else, there was no bet, there being no money to pay, and if he added "I'll be good for it," meaning by asking that question is to be construed to mean only that he will pay if he loses, and he expects you to pay if you lose. It is one of the things that will differ. 2. In the War of the Rebellion there were far more Americans engaged, on either side, than all the other nationalities put together. 3. Railroad euchre is at least ten years old.

J. H. C., Hartland.—"A bets B that in shaking two dice ten times, one specified dice comes up an ace more times than it comes up a deuce. Will a referee compel A to settle taking the bet?".....We are enabled to but glance at the above. As it seems to involve no wager, we shall venture to say that B has thirty-three and one-third per cent. the best of it, leaving nowise open to possible correction by some of our readers who have more time than we have, just now, for figuring.

CLIP, Philadelphia.—Certainly not. At any time in a game any player can be taken from one position and placed in another, thereby allowing all of the nine to take turns in pitching or catching. But no substitute can be introduced after the third inning. If he is introduced before that time, he can, of course, pitch or catch, as the captain may direct. In changing a pitcher, the player substituted must be one of the nine playing, not an outsider brought in to pitch.

PRINTE R, Buffalo.—1. The manager is clearly liable. They should have commenced a suit at once for the amount already due, and have remanded idle in that city, notifying the manager in the presence of witnesses that they were ready to fulfill their engagement, and giving an address where they could be found on any moment during the customary hours allotted to rehearsals and performances. By accepting a other engagement they would forfeit all claim for salary during the time so employed. 2.

B. C., St. Louis.—1. They are trained by a member of the college to which they belong—generally the captain of the crew—who is a professional being employed. That depends much upon the amount of exercise taken in the gymnasium before the commencement of close training. Usually, four or five weeks are sufficient. 3. Save the rowing and sparring, the training in both cases is much the same.

SUBSCRIBER.—The New York and Harlem Railroad Co. are either unable or unwilling to state when the small horse-cars first ran on their road, and all that we can elicit from a personal interview with the superintendent is to the effect that the Common Council granted the franchise in 1852. Under these circumstances we are unwilling to decide the bet as to whether or not prior to 1857.

W. J. R.—The Governor of Connecticut is usually elected by a majority vote, for it is seldom that there are more than two candidates in the field. In municipal elections the plurality, which latter means more votes than any other candidate, but less than half of the whole number cast. The majority, where but two candidates run, is more than two full, a majority is possible, but a plurality is likelier.

C. J. D., Washington.—1. Unless it has been agreed to play not only straight flushes, but also, specifically, straight flushes, four aces are the best poker hand, whether in Washington or elsewhere. 2. According to the book known as "Hoyle," if you agree to play straights at all, then a straight flush will beat four aces. But that is not our decision—straight flushes must be agreed upon.

COLUMBUS.—Yes, if you choose, to hit pinpoint, the striker can play with either; and he can also play directly at the pins, by using the round ball nearest them. It is then not necessary for it to hit a ball. Or if he chooses, he may play with the fast-heat frozen ball, driving either or both at the pins.

T. T., Kansas City.—1. Write to the firm that is supposed to have "ten bushels of diamonds on hand," to state whether they are precious stones or brilliants, or both. Perhaps you mean a coal-yard—black diamonds. 2. There is such a diamond first at 58 Nassau street and at 29 Maiden lane; we do not remember the numbers.

A. V., Milwaukee.—1. From $100 and all expenses per week, upward, according to merit and reputation, and the number of times she would be required to sing. 2. From all expenses and $50 per week upward. 3. The American Literary Bureau, Cooper Institute, in this city, and J. Redpath's Lecture Bureau, Bromfield street, Boston, Mass.

A. R. C., Philadelphia.—1. We never have more than one in each city. 2. One is traveling with Mme. Janauschek, and the other with Furbish's Fifth-avenue Theatre Combination.

MINSTREL AGENT, Steubenville.—Many of the Southern States have such a tax, but to show men it is generally classified as the State or county tax. We never published any special article upon it.

J. C.—The bet should be drawn, for lack of definiteness. In common parlance Spring in this latitude begins on March 1; but astronomically, or as matter of fact, it does not begin until about March 21.

BILLY FLEA DUFF, Chicago.—1. There is no Sailors' Home in this city, we believe. At Staten Island there is a Sailors' Snug Harbor, the city office of which is at 156 Broadway. 2. Cannot say.

FISTIANA, Chicago.—Jim Mace and Tom Sayers were never opponents in the ring. Mace scales that they sparred together at the Royal Oak, Manchester, Liverpool, and Birkenhead.

H. M.—1. Peruse our advertising columns. 2. You must furnish music for the entire orchestra. There are very few on the stage who give instruction. James Bradley of the Theatre Comique does.

ED. PARKER, Chicago.—1. At cassino a player who combines to say "five" cannot build that pile to say "ten," unless his antagonist has meanwhile built it to some intermediate number. 2. No. The nines are not forfeited.

CONSTANT READER.—The Britannic of the White Star line was advertised to leave Queenstown on her first voyage on July 31, 1874. She probably so left; and it is certain that she made the run in about eight days.

WIZ, Toronto.—1. No. 2. Never in the ring. We keep no record of outside affairs. 3. An American. 4. The proper way to deal at euchre is by twos and threes, and in that order. 5. About 55,000.

CONSTANT READER.—1. You can learn the gentleman's address by applying at the Knickerbocker Cottage, Sixth avenue, above Twenty-seventh street. 2. We do not answer such questions.

GREY BLACK.—The addresses of the secretaries of the sixty odd clubs belonging to the Amateur Association will be published in the association book about the first week in April by Beck & Snyder.

GYMNAST, Portland.—He has performed that feat nightly in this city for many weeks past, and we published in THE CLIPPER a full description of it when it was first accomplished in this city in public.

ALTON, Baltimore.—You were correctly informed—the salary ranges from $25 to $150 per week, according to professional merit and reputation. Your salary would naturally increase as you became known.

R. R. G., Phila.—See our answer last week to "J. B., Troy." If that is not satisfactory, consult your pastor or family physician.

PRINTER, Kirksville.—Four of a kind will beat a flush, unless it has been agreed to play routine or straight flushes, which latter will beat four aces.

LITTLE CAD, Peabody.—1. Rules B's game. 2. It would be a draw game. 3. In Massachusetts, five sixes will beat five aces at poker dice.

D. H. H., Boston.—Lady Suffolk's best time, 2:26, was made at Cambridge Course, Mass., June 14, 1849. It was under saddle.

BRITON, Rahway.—The first Jew admitted to the English House of Commons was Baron Rothschild, the date being July 26, 1858.

J. S., Ohio.—There is no work devoted especially to that subject. It could be learned from a general study of chemistry.

W. R., Middletown.—We are not agents for any professional persons. Address a letter to his "Manager," in care of this office.

J. M. PRENTISS.—Lawrence Barrett has played the leading character in "Rosedale" in nearly all the principal cities of this country.

MONTCLAIR, N. J.—Certainly not. At poker a player who passes before the draw, and before any bet has been made, can come in in case anyone behind him bets.

B. RIGGS, Atlanta.—1. They were received, and one or two have appeared. 2. It is not necessary so to state. 3. It is mailed regularly.

S. P. S., Norristown.—1. We are not sure; but think it is the same. 2. Yes, as published in THE CLIPPER by Edward Ledger, No. 49 Wellington street, Strand, London, Eng.

H. J., Albany.—No answers by mail. She is living, and is now engaged in performing in Canada. See dramatic summary in this issue.

UNKNOWN.—Your letter never reached us. No such correspondence between the parties named was ever published in THE CLIPPER.

RUSH HOUSE, Phila.—Either the buyer or the party who has the sell makes the trump. The game of pedro is in that respect like the auction pitch.

CHARLEY, St. Louis.—It cannot be done. Nearly all the very skillful billiard-players who call themselves amateurs are in reality professionals.

L., Charlestown.—We do not know him. If he is a professional a letter addressed to him, stating on the envelope his business, in care of this office, will reach him.

2 Gray Planet made one mile in 1m. 42¾s., which is the fastest recorded time by a running horse.

J. B., Troy.—1. Your question is not a running-time for one mile is 1:42¾, by Gray Planet, at Saratoga. Time is not recorded on the English turf.

JAMES CONROY, Bangor.—The fight between Heenan and Sayers ended in a draw, the latter giving up the belt to the editor of Bell's Life, and retiring from the ring.

CONSTANT READER, Meriden.—Yes, three times—by Charley Gallagher, Mike McCool and Jim Mahar; the second battle being given against him on a claim of foul.

ST. JOHN.—1. Jackson the American Deer ran 11 miles 390 yards in an hour, in England. Deerfoot ran 400 yards farther. 2. Yes.

JEFFERSONVILLE.—1. At pedro, a player can bid but once, except on account of all the other players. 2. It is a sweep, if the cards are all matched.

BOATHOOK.—"In this latitude, wind blowing at the rate of sixty feet a second is accounted a hurricane. 2. We have had such hurricanes right in this city.

NED SANDFORD, Washington.—"Struck Blind" was evidently translated from the same original French play, but the two versions are conveyed in materially different.

F. W., Chicago.—We thank you for your well-meant proposition, but we must decline, because it is not our way of doing business.

FREIGHT.—The fastest wagon-time is 2:21¼, by Judge Fullerton. See CLIPPER ALMANAC for further information, and also for other distances than one mile club for 1875 has been stated as follows: Smith, c.; Tegeman, p.; Balmer, 1st b.; Titterton, 2d b.; Vanderveer, 3d b.; Story, s. s.; Lee, l. f.; Ryan, c. f.; and Scribner, r. f. The latter is a good change catcher, and Balmer is a change pitcher. The club will be ready to receive challenges the latter part of May. The secretary is W. K. Titterton, Flatbush, L. I. They play at Prospect Park, do not share gate-money, and pay all their own expenses.

THE TRIGGER.

PIGEON-SHOOTING AT BRIDGEPORT, CT.

Sherwood's Driving Park, Bridgeport, Ct., was on Friday, March 26, the scene of considerable excitement among the pigeon-shooting fraternity. The first event was a match for $50 a side, between Mr. Frank Burrett of Norwalk and Mr. A. B. Laws of Bridgeport, at ten birds each, 1⅛ oz. shot, 21yds. rise, and 80yds. boundary; Long Island rules to govern. One special condition of this match was that Mr. Barrett should use only one hand in shooting, while his opponent had the advantage of both hands. Barrett led off, missed his first two birds, killed six in succession, and then retired, having scored 6 out of 8 shot at. Adams commenced promisingly with killing his first two birds; but, missing the next five, he was "shot out" and retired, as he could neither win nor tie his opponent; his score being 2 killed out of 7 shot at.

A sweepstakes of three birds each, $5 entrance, 21 yards rise, 80 yards boundary and 1¼ ounce shot, was next on the card; the winner taking $25; second best, $10; and the third, $5. The Long Island rules governed, and Mr. P. Weeks of Bridgeport was referee. There were eight entries, viz., Moses Baglis, Walter Ireland (both of New York), Lucius Abbott, James A. Hall, James Brogden, Frank Barrett, D. Tapscott, and Elmer Langden. The two New York shooters, Messrs. Baglis and Ireland, each killed their three birds, and divided first and second money; Mr. Abbott taking third prize after tieing and shooting off with Mr. Hall.

The principal event of the day followed; it was a match for $450, between Frank Burrett of Norwalk and Lucius Abbott of Bridgeport, the conditions being to shoot at 25 birds each, 21 yards rise, 80 yards boundary, 1⅝ ounce of shot, one trap, and the Long Island Shooting Club rules to govern. Barrett led off and missed his first bird, but brought down nine in succession, failed to count on his eleventh bird—which fell dead out of bounds—and then killed nine out of the remaining fourteen, his total score being 18 killed out of 25 shot at. Mr. Abbott did not shoot in his customary style, for he scored only 13 and missed 12 out of 25 shot at, thus losing the match by 5 birds.

THE SCORES:

Bridgeport, Ct., March 26.—Match $100; 10 birds each, 21yds. rise, 80yds. boundary, 1⅛oz. shot; Long Island rules.
Flyds rise, 80yds. boundary, 1⅛oz. shot; Long Island rules.
Frank Burrett, Norwalk.....	0011l 111; killed 6, missed 2
A. B. Laws, Bridgeport.....	11000 00; killed 2, missed 5
SAME DAY—Sweepstakes of 3 birds each, $5 entrance; same conditions.
Moses Baylis.....	111 Lucius Abbott..... 011 01
Walter Ireland.....	111 J. A. Hall..... 011 00
J. Brogden.....	010 F. Barrett..... 010
Dr. Tapscott.....	001 E. Langdon..... 000
Referee, Peter Weeks of Bridgeport.
SAME DAY—Match for $450; 25 birds each, 21yds. rise, 80yds. boundary, 1⅝oz. shot; Long Island Rules.
F. Burrett, Norwalk—01111 1111 01111 10011 00101—killed 18, missed 7.
L. Abbott, Bridgeport—10011 10100 10100 01110 11010—killed 13, missed 12.
Referee, Mr. James Stewart.

AMERICAN TEAM.—The entertainment to be given at the Academy of Music on Saturday evening, April 3, for the purpose of raising funds to defray the expenses of the American team who are to contend in the return rifle match on Irish soil, promises to be completely successful. Up to March 26 the sum realized from the sale of boxes alone amounted to $1,630. The general admission has been fixed at $1, with seats at $2.50. The tragedy of "Othello" will be performed, and Grafulla's Seventh Regiment Band will discourse sweet sounds during the intervals between the acts.

A TRIGGER CONTEST, for prizes of $40, $30 $20 and $10 to come off at the Eagle Hotel, Kingsessing, Philadelphia, March 22. Each contestant shot at ten single birds, Wm. Greenwood of Germantown taking the first prize by killing all his birds. Chas. Davis, Miles Johnson and W. Westerberg killed nine apiece, and in shooting off the tie, at 5 yards, Johnson carried off second money.

THE TURF.

RACING AND TROTTING NOTES.

Mr. George Mansur, the lessee of Dexter Park, Chicago, intends holding a four days' running and trotting meeting over that track, commencing on July 20; purses to the amount of $45,000 will be hung up for competition.....A new trotting circuit has been formed, composed of the Woodbury and Salem Associations, N. The dates of their Spring Meetings being as follows: Woodbury, June 1, 2, 3 and 4; Ambler Park, June 8, 9, 10 and 11; Norristown, June 15, 16, 17 and 18; and Salem, June 22, 23, 24 and 25. Purses amounting in the aggregate to $12,000 will be given.....W. H. Blandy of Zanesville, O., has purchased of Mr. Charles Bathgate, Westchester County, N. Y., the two-year-old colt Speed, by Volunteer, out of the dam of Volunteer Maid.....The sum of $12,000 was offered by Mr. Alden Goldsmith of Orange County, N. Y., for the fast running colt Rocket, the property of Mr. T. N. Avery of Ithaca, N. Y.; but it was refused, $15,000 being the price wanted.....Mr. L. C. Chase of Boston has sold to Mr. R. E. Clark of this city the gray trotting gelding Doubtful, by Pilot Jr., for the alleged price of $4,000. The horse has a record of 2:29.....Mr. John Cole of Sufferns, N. Y., has sold to Mr. C. Alloway of Inwood the chestnut colt Owen Cutler, 4 years old, by Leamington out of an Australian mare, for $1,200. The Queen's Plate in Canada is this year to be run for over the Woodstock Course, but no date is yet fixed.....Commodore Belknap of this city has purchased through Dr. Herr of Lexington the two trotters Vinewood, 6 years old, by Ashland Chief, and Pilot Chief, 4 years old, by Clark Chief; they will make a splendid team, being matched in color size and speed.....Mr. S. J. McClellan of Boone, Iowa, desires to match his trotting stallion Sleepy Blucher against any stallion in the world, to trot a race of mile heats, for $1,000 or $5,000, stipulating that the horse named against him shall have no more training than Blucher has had.....The black trotting stallion MambrinoBoy, by Mambrino Patchen, dam by Strader's Cassius M. Clay Jr., died recently of colic in Lincoln County, Ky.; also the trotting stallion Magnolia, by American Star out of a mare by Jay Hickmond, owned by W. Payborne, Birmingham, Ohio; he was found dead in his paddock.....Charley Green will this season train the seven-year-old trotting gelding George R. Dallels, owned by Messrs. Mills and Hill of Orange County, N. Y.....General Phil Sheridan's Winchester horse is suffering from rheumatism in his owner's stables in Chicago, where he is a pensioner for life.....We learn by telegraph that the Victoria (Australia) St. Leger, run for on March 6, was won by Melbourne, who also carried off the Victoria Derby last October.

PEDESTRIANISM.

W. E. HARLAND, a pedestrian of local repute, was on March 4 married in Norfolk, Va., to Miss Della Gonzales, known professionally as "Little Della," serio-comic vocalist, now performing at the Varieties, in that city.

MR. WEARDEN, who for many years past was associated with the Prince of Wales Ground, Bow, London, Eng., as manager and handicapper, died on March 10, aged about 44. On the Saturday before he had officiated as started and judge in a mile handicap.

GREAT SUCCESS OF THE Monarch of all Ventriloquists

HARRY KENNEDY,

AT OL. SINN'S PARK THEATRE, BROOKLYN.

FROM THE BROOKLYN DAILY EAGLE, MARCH 19, 1875.

Mr. Kennedy the ventriloquist has made quite a hit in Brooklyn, and is now presenting to the people the best effects as certainly marvelous, and their marvel is heightened by the seeming absence of all effort on the part of the performer. We believe Mr. Kennedy is but a new beginner before the public. He will not have long to wait before his talents in his special and amusing line will be recognized throughout the country.

BROOKLYN DAILY UNION, MARCH 23, 1875.

One of the most pleasing acts was that of Harry Kennedy, an accomplished ventriloquist, who performs very astonishing tricks with his voice, delivering selection, and resorting to mechanical appliances to aid him.

ODE TO SPRING.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER, MARCH 20, 1875.

"Spring, Spring, gentle Spring"
(Thunder! how this air does sting!)
Tender lambs are on the wold
(Oh, my heavens! mine it cold!)
Sweet the blackbird's song is heard
(John, why aint that fire stirred?)
Bow in swarms the busy bees
(Gracious! I shall surely freeze!)
Soft and bland the south-wind blows
(Ah! the frost has bit my nose!)
Mildly gleams the azure arch
(This is not a Forward March!)
"Spring, Spring, gentle Spring"
(Really 'tis too cold to sing);
All thy fields are verdure clad
(Now it hails, and that's too bad!)

"Spring, Spring, gentle Spring"
(Rain and hail and every thing!)
All thy skies are clear and bright
(Well, the ground is more than white!)
Birds are singing in the brake
(Oh, my gracious, how I shake!
Stir the fire within the grate!
Give me whiskey! hot—and straight!) NEMO.

TO THE DEATH.

A MANAGER'S STORY.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER, BY MRS. E. BURKE COLLINS.

She was a strange woman—a very strange woman. Even at the height of her popularity, her unusual demeanor attracted attention to the fact that she was unlike other professionals—at least, unlike any that ever came in my way, and I've seen hard lots, too; but never, in all the years that I was manager of the Grand-street Theatre in L——, did another such occurrence take place, and, Heaven knows, it was enough to go through it all once. Let me tell you the story.

It was in the beginning of the season of 1870-71 that Miss Marshall, our leading lady, suddenly met with a streak of good-luck. Something occurred to her that seldom happens, in the profession or out of it, especially when the object is as worthy as she was; in short, an obliging relative died and left her a considerable fortune. Well, it was necessary for her to sail for Europe to claim her property; and, glad as I was to know of her good-luck, I was still considerably annoyed at the prospect of filling her place. There was positively nobody whom I could engage that came up to our standard, for the season had fairly opened, and an unusually brilliant season it made bid fair to be. I had not the heart to insist on Miss Marshall's keeping her share of the contract and remain, for I had too fatherly a regard for the girl who was the mainstay of her family; and yet I felt that I was placed in about as uncomfortable a position as a manager need wish to be in.

I was sitting in my office one morning, a few days before Miss Marshall expected to sail, and, puffing away fiercely at a cigar, was turning over in my mind the vexing problem, when there came a soft, hesitating rap on my office door. In response to my summons it opened, and a tall, graceful figure advanced into the room. She raised her heavy veil then, and in a very low but musical voice said:

"Mr. Montford, I presume?"

I tossed away my cigar, and sprang to place her a seat, while I acknowledged my own introduction, stealing, meanwhile, a glance at the face, which the veil no longer hid. Indeed it was a face to look at—childish, with waving golden hair, but with so strange a gleam, so exceedingly wild and "eery" a look in her eyes—which, being black, seemed very much out of place with her sunny locks—that I shrank involuntarily away. She spoke then with that clear, well-modulated voice, and a slightly foreign accent:

"I have called," she said, "to apply for the position of leading lady. I have never performed in America, and have but recently left France. I am a native of Alsace, I added, a little proudly, as if in answer to a query that I certainly had not made.

She then proceeded to exhibit credentials from several well-known French theatres, and I saw that she was billed as Mademoiselle Lenore Lisle. Then she placed in my hand a recommendation as to ability, etc., from an American actress now retired from the stage, but whose name was a passport to my favor. She seemed very anxious to secure the situation, and rehearsed, as proof of her powers, a portion of "Kathleen Mavourneen," acquitting herself so creditably that my mind, already greatly inclined in her favor, was decided at once. I engaged her. She drew a great sigh of relief, as I stated that fact.

"Monsieur, vous etes tres bon," she murmured, breaking into her native French, and gathering her shawl closer about her.

Was it fancy, or did I hear a moan? I started from my seat. She was as white as marble, and I could not refrain from questioning her concerning this sudden illness. But she put away my inquiries, and repelled me with a slight gesture.

"It is nothing. I am not ill," she said calmly, and without a tremor in her voice, turning to go as she spoke. Then a strange thought crossed my mind—an impression that we were not alone in the room. took possession of me, and involuntarily I followed her to the door. She was standing in the dimly-lighted entry, and, with a face full of the saddest entreaty, seemed gazing imploringly at something—what? I strained my eyes in the semi-darkness—of course, you will all laugh at me, call it absurd, etc.—but I distinctly saw, standing at her side, the shadow—only the shadow—of a human being. A chill fell on the atmosphere; strong hands seemed grasping at my throat; I dashed back into the office and slammed the door. From that hour, I'll confess it, I was afraid of our leading lady!

The night of her first appearance arrived. The house was full—crowded—for a pretty debutante is a strong magnet, and I had advertised largely. She was to make her debut on the American stage as Marco in "The Maeble Heart." Just as the orchestra "struck up," and as I was passing near one of the "wings," somebody touched my arm, and an imploring little face looked up into mine. It was Miss Marie, the favorite of the company. She was dressed for her part, as the slave in the prologue of the play; but there was an anxious look in her eyes, and a nervous ring in her clear, soft voice, as she addressed me:

"Mr. Montford," said she, "I am afraid to 'go on' to-night."

"What?" cried I, "an actress of three seasons' experience down with the stage-fright at this late day?"

"No, sir," she responded, laughing, though in a half-hysterical manner; "but I'll tell you. It makes me nervous to go near Miss Lenore. Everybody says she is haunted. Just watch her when she stands in the shadow, or any place where the lights are not turned on, and you will see—what we've all seen."

"And what is that?" I asked hastily.

Marie looked at me, with close scrutiny, before making answer.

"Mr. Montford, you must have observed it. The shadow of a man, carrying something in his arms, appears at her side, and seems to wring his hands, and gaze at her imploringly. The first time we saw it it was at rehearsal, and there wasn't much light. Mr. Carter cried out when he noticed it, and then, of course, everybody gathered around her, and she fainted away. I don't think she would have fainted, for the world, if she could have controlled herself; for, after she recovered, she would go on with her part, only saying she wished the lights had been up when she was so faint, and then Mr. Carter opened the windows, and we saw no more of the ghost that day. It has appeared twice since then."

"Nonsense!" cried I. "It was all your imagination." But, just then, the call-boy summoned Miss Marie, and I was left to ponder on the strange recital to which I had been listening.

Mademoiselle Lenore made a successful debut. In short, she pleased, and became popular. Our theatre was never so well patronized before, and I congratulated myself upon the accession to the company that had so mysteriously come in my way. There was but one objection to the young lady, and that was her extreme willfulness in regard to the plays put on; for she would not appear in any part where a dim light was absolutely necessary, and in my secret heart I fancied her reasons therefor. I was dazed, bewildered, by the woman; but she certainly was a superb creature, a fine actress, and altogether a winning card, and I must retain her for the remainder of the season, no matter what happened.

But something did happen, and the end came at last. We had been playing "Camille," and Mademoiselle Lenore performed her part as I had seldom before seen it represented. She entered fully into the whole soul into it; to merge her own existence into that of the woman she represented, until I saw that her bodily strength was giving way, and, realizing somehow that the character was too much for her, I decided to replace "Camille" with a new drama, which I had for some time been intending to introduce. The preliminary rehearsals were over, and the morning of the day upon which it was to be produced had arrived, when again Mademoiselle Lenore sought me in my sanctum. She came in with a white but resolute face, and dropped wearily into the chair I offered her.

"You are working too hard, mademoiselle," I said kindly.

"Mr. Montford," she cried abruptly, springing to her feet as she spoke, as if the action imparted strength and courage to her, "I have come to tell you my story. After that you can discharge me, if you see fit. I shall die soon, anyway," she murmured, half to herself. Then, gathering courage from my apparent interest in her trouble, she continued, speaking in a hard, defiant voice, as if she wished not to justify herself, but felt obliged to hasten through the sad recital—the tragedy of her life. "I am," said she hurriedly, "a married woman. I was born and reared in Alsace, and there became the wife of Jean Roquette, and one child was born to us. But we did not live happily together. O mon Dieu! I never loved him, monsieur. They—my parents—made me his wife, and I—I loved another, and—grande Ciel!—I could not forget him. He was an actor; he performed in Paris; and, monsieur—do not despise me too greatly—I fled, fled with the man I loved, and left behind me Jean and my child. Ah, was petite enfant!" cried the miserable woman, bowing her rigid face in her trembling hands. "There was a pause; then she went on slowly: "After he had departed, Jean lost his reason, and, swearing terrible oaths that he would haunt me ever, he took our child—it was a little girl, monsieur—and he swore that it should not live to follow in its mother's footsteps. Pauvre petite fille!" She gasped for breath a moment, before she could finish. "With the child in his arms, he committed suicide by drowning. But he keeps his word—they haunt me ever. I came to America, hoping to be free from them, but they are ever at my side." She paused, breathing in a quick, excited manner.

"And the actor—your lover?" I queried.

"He is dead—all are dead—I have no one! I tell you my story, because I find that the other members of the company look upon me with distrust, and I would have one friend. I do not blame them; and yet, if I am discharged, whither shall I go?"

I did not discharge her; but I confess to some misgivings when the curtain arose that night on the play. It was a society drama, of the sensational order, and the plot so closely resembled the story of Lenore's life that I marveled at her attempting to perform the role of the heroine. I did not realise what a woman can do when once she is determined. The incidents of the play were similar to those of a certain great scandal occupying the minds of society leaders at that time; so it came to pass that we were obliged to refuse admittance to many, for lack of room, the house was so full. Elated with the prospect of such success, I sought Mademoiselle Lenore, and endeavored to inspire her with some of my hopefulness. But she seemed like a marble statue.

The curtain arose, and the scene progressed in the most satisfactory manner. The denouement of this story came in the second act, where a guilty wife is about to fly from home with her lover. I shall never forget Lenore as she "went on," in her trailing robe of black velvet, and her face an ashen white, as she prepared to again enact the tragedy of her real life. It was a terrible ordeal. It must have seemed to her, in that supreme moment of agony, that she "held in her hands the plummet that sounded hell."

She was bending over the bed of her sleeping child, outside the window her lover awaited her coming; the stage was in semi-darkness, as befitted the scene and incidents, when suddenly a wild cry fell on my ears, and, pausing not to consider possible consequences, I rushed on to the stage. I shall never forget it as long as I live. The audience were sitting as if spellbound, and all eyes were turned on Lenore, who was standing with her white hands clasped beseechingly, and her face turned to the part of the stage most in shadow. My eyes followed hers. A man stood beside her—a man with white, cadaverous face, and wild, wild black eyes. In his arms he held a child—a lovely little creature, but with the look of a dead babe in its pallid features. The spectre raised one hand and beckoned slowly to the agonized creature. He waved a thin, ghastly hand in the air, and then—oh, horror!—from his dead, rigid lips came the one word, "Lenore!"

Another shriek from our leading lady, a stream of blood followed it, and she fell prone upon the stage. I dashed forward and raised her in my arms—she was dead!

Of course the house was emptied in a moment—people don't care to mix in such scenes—and we were alone at last with the dead. But I must hasten to the end. In a few words I explained the tragedy and the sad story to the assembled company, and with the characteristic generosity of our profession they provided for her interment. In a sunny spot in a cemetery at L——rests the poor creature, who was sinned against as well as sinning; and at her head we placed a simple cross of white marble, inscribed with the one word LENORE.

And that is the end of my story.

THE BIRD OF FORTUNE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER, BY HENRY L. WILLIAMS.

Many years ago there dwelt in a land of the East a very poor man. Every day he crept into the forest to pick up dead-wood, which he carried to the doors of such of the well-to-do as were too miserly to pay the regular dealers in fuel.

In the evenings he had to wander from house to house to beg, and many a time at night the watchmen found him battling with dogs for the scraps of luxurious feasts. One dark hour, too sharp a hunger preventing his eyes from closing, and too much fatigue making him to ponder on the little room in his hovel with broken steps, his dragging foot ran against a projection in the floor of beaten earth. He had never perceived this thing before; it was a small steel nail, but it had the brightness of a silver pin. Attracted, in spite of himself, by its gleam in that dark hole, where a diamond could not be seen, he caught a single ray of the sun through the narrow slits called windows, Benali fell on his knees, with his gaze fixed on the object.

On thus nearing it, he was surprised with the extreme beauty of the nail, for its head was chiseled by a master hand; a variety of countless lines described upon it all the pictures of nature. As soon as one was seen another replaced it, so that they formed a marvelous panorama, though the point of view was only the nail-head.

"Heaven inspired me," he mused, "to keep indoors this night. The Jew in the street of the Yellow Fountain will give me enough for this magic pin to dine me for a week—a whole week!"

Whereupon, like a true son of a praying dervish Benali the woodgatherer, being still upon his knees, bowed his head in a prayer of gratitude.

Then, with a timidity for which he could not himself account, he stretched his hand towards the treasure. His fingers closed upon the object, at which same time they seemed to touch red-hot iron. Nevertheless, he did not release his prize, and the pain was but momentary. But unhappily, though Benali felt it, it could not be carefully examined with his most careful gaze. All its radiance had fled, and it had all the semblance of an ordinary iron nail—black, rusty and twisted.

Perplexed and angry, fearing the worst, Benali set to tugging at the nail. It resisted him stoutly, but what could a modest pin of iron do against a man furious at so bitter a disappointment? Still it held rather than yielded, and, instead of its being wrenched from the earth, it plucked up with it a long and wide flat stone to which it was attached.

With new emotion, the poor fellow peered into the opening. The stone was so flat that the cavity could not well be less obscure. Perhaps the wretched man would have let the stone fall back into its place, when a clink of metal on metal made him start. It was the nail, an instant before holding so fast to the plate, but now unloosing itself and falling through into the hole.

Benali ventured his shaking hand on it, where it met a cold, hard object. It was an ebony casket, banded with steel reddened with age. With an effort he lifted it out. It was locked, and its key, or any other, was not part of the furniture of the hovel.

The prospect of a fortune inspired the beggar, who remembered the nail and found it ready. Before examining his find, Benali hastened to secure the barless and lockless door with a billet, so that nobody could enter abruptly. In fear of the serpent which might naturally be the guardian of this treasure—forasmuch as all treasures in the East are thus guarded —Benali pressed the stone down into its place, and returned to the box.

He felt that it had three locks, but time and damp had so eaten away the bolts that to force them was a laborious task. On removing the lid, Benali's vexation was immense. All he could feel inside was a roll of parchment. He shook it and unrolled it, but there was no value in its contents, unless it bore writing.

Although such a rarity as a light or fire so early in a vagrant's retreat might attract a dangerous eye, Benali was too eager to know the whole truth to remain content at this point of his adventure.

Striking the nail on one of the stones of the pitiable hearth, where no fire had burnt for a score of years, he caught the sparks in a handful of rags. Soon a flame leaped up, kindled a splinter of limewood, and scrutinized the scroll.

As we have said, our poor hero was son of a priest, and, as such, had been taught to read and write, the only acquisition of which poverty had not deprived him. Never was his heart so full of joy for that power before—this instant, for the parchment bore these weighty words:

"My unhappy brother!—for no one but the very poor would grovel in so horribly sordid a habitation —it is my bliss to bring to you all that man in misery may desire.

"Go, on that night when the evening star is eclipsed by the moon, on the right bank of the Sacred River, and you will see Fortune approach you from the Orient. Wait for the very instant when she is at your side, and then cling to her robe, and show the nail which is lacking to her wheel. In return, she will grant you all that you demand, save—remember this well, O brother!—those things which belong unto heaven alone.

"And you, may your contact with Fortune be no less happy than mine promises to be.

"My rich brother, hail to thee!

"COLSUN the Dog, who was but a clod under the slipper of the millionaire, but now becomes peer of the greatest!"

The reader let the burnt-out splinters fall from his scorched fingers. To view Fortune as plainly as a common pariah's daughter!

A dazzling vision of gold, pearls, diamonds and coin seared his eyes, and, if he had not been kneeling on the floor, he must have fallen.

The night of the conjunction of the star and planet was the next one! Whence would come the patience to endure so much delay? His whole life of labor did not equal that space. After having strengthened the door with another prop, Benali laid down. But sleep was forbidden to his eyes, and he sprang up at dawn not a whit refreshed. His hunger was more and more sharp, but he defied it now with a smile on his famished lips, as he thought of his orgies to come.

He covered the nail with kisses and the parchment with tears of joy, and stared at the mildewed box as though it were a modest pin of iron dug

CUPID'S FOIBLES, FOLLIES AND FANCIES.

A MIDNIGHT STREET-SCENE.

A gaslight trickled down the haze
Upon a haggish head,
Whence looks came stiffened by a glaze
As from eyeballs of the dead.

With her, two girls, or either hand;
One bursting through thin rags
Into sweet maidenhood, her bland
Eye cast upon the flags.

The dear child breathed like a warm day's breath
Thrust on midwinter's sky,
With frost before, behind, beneath,
And pitiless north winds nigh.

For her no meed of chaste caress;
Gross shades about her prowl,
That ere she grow to thoughts that bless
Will grow to shapes that howl.

Her hollest warmths to scalding harms
Turned by offense and waste,
No babe shall nestle in her arms,
All mother's germens blasted.

Her heart-throbs do but mix the blood
For the ghastly sacrifice
Of a teemful unknit womanhood,
On the Moloch shrine of vice.

'Tis the direst murder life can know,
It saps the font of health,
To strike with lusts a maiden low,
Her loves and all their wealth.

The mother's face, with hunger lean
And cold and poverty,
With crimes was leaner, that had been,
And crimes that were to be. G. H. CALVERT.

THE STORY OF A FLOWER-GIRL.

Everybody has heard of Isabella, the famous flower-girl of the Jockey Club, and many of my readers must remember her when she was a young and pretty girl, some fifteen or more years ago. She had then come in from Sannois, Seine-et-Oise, where her mother lived by selling garden vegetables. Isabella's beauty soon attracted attention, and she obtained the enviable place of bouquetiere to the Jockey Club. For some time she was noted for her virtue as well as for her beauty, but to remain virtuous under such temptations is almost beyond possibility. And how could one expect Isabella to go back to Sannois and work her life out behind a little truck, or in digging potatoes in the gardens? She could not give up her life at the Jockey Club, and was soon under the protection of one of its wealthiest members. Isabella is now a fair and comely person approaching forty, a little too fat, but still pretty, and has a son who is now quite a young man. She has just had the first scandal that has marked her career. The other day a poor peasant woman named Briant applied to the authorities of Sannois for relief, and it was found that she was the mother of Isabella. Mme. Briant was admitted; but a demand was made upon her daughter for a pittance for her support, only two francs a day being required in the poor-house. Isabella resisted. To her credit it must be said that she had offered money to her mother, but the virtuous old peasant spurned it as long as her back held out to dig potatoes, and would not accept money of the sort. The pride of the flower-girl was touched and she said no more, but she made an effort to get her mother from the poor-house, offering her a home in Paris. Mme. Briant refused this, and Isabella refused to grant the small pension. She was sued for the sum. In court it was shown that she was in good circumstances, receiving 15,000 or 16,000 francs a year from her position, a pension of 6,000 francs from M. De Rothschild, and being the owner of a house in Paris and two in Sannois. Her counsel tried to show that her income was uncertain and precarious, but this would not do, and Isabella was condemned to pay her mother 780 francs a year for life.—Paris cor. N. Y. Times.

BREACH OF PROMISE.

Kate Hissong sued William Hart for breach of promise of marriage and seduction. An order of arrest was issued, Hart gave bail in the sum of $500, Daniel Schmidt and George Dumser being his sureties. Judgment was recovered for $732.31. The execution issued thereon was returnable on the 9th of December last. The bail failed to surrender Hart until thirty days afterwards. Five days afterwards Hart gave the Sheriff bail on the limits, and ten days after that the Sheriff returned the execution with the indorsement "defendant not found." Then Miss Hissong sued the bail on their bond, and they applied to Judge Curtis in the Superior Court to be exonerated from liability. They presented an affidavit of Hart, that a deputy sheriff, named Cafferty came to him twice and asked him if he was ready to arrange the matter. Judge Curtis yesterday rendered a decision denying the application, saying it cannot be sustained under section 188 of the code, because it was not made before the expiration of ten days after the undertaking. The bail also appealed to the favor of the Court, and Judge Curtis holds that the Court can exercise discretion in exoneration of bail, and upon this point he says: "The attention of the Court is called to the nature of the action for the judgment in which the bail are only in part liable. The evidence at the trial showed that the defendant, who was engaged to be married to the plaintiff, took advantage of her extreme youth and simplicity to seduce her, left her pregnant and unprovided for, while he departed for a trip to Europe, and refused to marry or make any provision for her and her child. He left both in such a state that the young mother, who worked and seemed to have led a correct life, barely lived, and the child after some months perished, apparently from want. The defendant displayed a remarkable degree of baseness, cruelty and niggardly meanness." Judge Curtis holds that on application, so far as it is addressed to the discretion of the Court, should not be granted, because there has been already too much delay on the part of the bail.—N. Y. World, March 24.

A MERCENARY LOVER AND A DISAPPOINTED MAIDEN.—A dispatch to The Boston (Mass.) Herald, dated March 15, says: "Two young ladies belonging in a neighboring State, well-to-do-in-the-world, good looking, and possessed of a considerable sum in their own right, but not afraid to work, came to this city some months ago and obtained situations in a well-known business house, being desirous of seeing city life and having wider opportunities to indulge their æsthetic tastes than their country home afforded. A young man having authority in the same establishment, of pleasing address and well favored, paid marked attention to the younger of the two ladies, and they became engaged to be married. The girls, knowing the young man's means to be limited, and his salary not large, lavished rich presents of jewelry and clothing upon him, and last Summer, when he was sick, nursed him back to health at their mountain home. But after their return his attentions grew cooler, and one evening he took another young lady to a ball in City Hall. His betrothed was filled with rage, and, procuring a bottle of vitriol, she endeavored to ruin her faithless lover's companion's beauty as they returned from the ball, but only succeeded in spoiling her dress. An explanation, confession and make-up followed, though the matter got into the papers. But the lover remained cool, and his betrothed's brother called him to account and insisted upon a speedy wedding. This the fellow refused point-blank unless the lady were placed in his hands; to which, being could move him; and the brother, affecting to comply with the proposition, made up a brown paper bundle, which at a subsequent interview he turned over to the gay deceiver. The latter, supposing he had the funds, then declared he would take his own time about getting married; but the law was invoked, and after a short imprisonment he yielded, and on Friday the couple were wedded. But the bridegroom before night left the city and his bride of an hour. The elder sister, it is said, was so affected in mind by the other's troubles that on Saturday she attempted suicide, but was prevented from accomplishing her purpose. The end."

A BLACK SOORNDREL LYNCHED.—A telegram from Washington, D. C., dated March 23, gives the following particulars of a horrible crime committed on the 23d ult. in Prince George County, Md., and the summary punishment meted out to the dastardly perpetrator: "Mr. Nelson, who a few years ago came to this section of the country from the North, purchased a portion of the Notley Hall estate, in Maryland, nearly opposite Alexandria and about seven miles from this city. Since then he has been engaged in improving the place. He had in his employ a young negro named Simms, about 21 years of age. Last night Mr. Nelson had occasion to come to this city, and about midnight the negro Simms, taking advantage of his absence, and Mrs. Nelson being alone and unprotected, went to the house, and, entering it, committed a shocking outrage upon the person of the sleeping chamber of Mrs. Nelson. When he entered the sleeping chamber of Mrs. Nelson last night he was armed with a revolver, and announced his purpose, not only to commit the crime, but that he also intended to kill himself, threatening at the same time that if any outcry or resistance was made he would kill his victim and her babe, two years of age, that was sleeping by her side. The scoundrel remained in the room for three hours after the commission of the crime, and then, after again outraging the helpless and terrified woman, shot himself in the left shoulder, and went to his own room, where he was arrested. The incensed residents of the neighborhood took him from the authorities and hung him from the first convenient tree they found. The rope was put around his neck before he was taken from the room, and the scoundrel was seated upon a horse that was driven from under him as soon as the rope was fastened to a limb of the tree. Several colored men in the vicinity took an active part in the lynching."

KISSING IN CHINA.—It is a singular fact that the custom of kissing is altogether unknown in China. The Chinese, indeed, have no word or term expressing love as we understand the tender passion. An American navy officer voyaging Chinawards narrates an amusing experience of the ignorance of the Chinese maidens of the science of kissing. Wishing to complete a conquest he had made of a young maiden (beautiful lady), he invited her—using the English words—to give him a kiss. Finding her comprehension of his request somewhat obscure, he suited the action to the word and took a delicious kiss. The girl ran away into another room, thoroughly alarmed, exclaiming, "Terrible Foreigner!" The officer followed, though the matter got into the papers. But the lover remained cool, and his betrothed's brother called him to account and insisted upon a speedy wedding. This the fellow refused point-blank unless the lady were placed in his hands; to which, being could move him; and the brother, affecting to comply with the proposition, made up a brown paper bundle, which at a subsequent interview he turned over to the gay deceiver. REDUCTION AND MURDER.—A dispatch from Lancaster, Pa., dated March 17, informs us that Thomas H. Goodwin, practicing physician of Windsor Township, York County, had been arrested and committed to prison there for the seduction of Miss Mary Eichelberger of that city, and an attempt to commit abortion upon her, from the effects of which she died on that date. She was found a week previously, by relatives, concealed in a hut in Maryland. The victim, who was connected with a good family previously, was twenty-three years old. The details of the affair are horrible.

THE GRAND JURY of Brockville, Ontario, on March 24 brought in true bills against W. H. Greaves, and Dr. and Mrs. Sparham, for malpractice on Miss Burnham, who died last December.

DRAMATIC AND OPERATIC NOVELTIES
IN ENGLAND AND FRANCE.

"JANE SHORE."

a new dramatic poem by W. G. Wills, was produced at the Amphitheatre, Leeds, Eng., on Monday evening, March 8, and is spoken of as a great work, which will add considerably to the fame of the talented author of "Charles I." The following notice is taken from The Era:

In treating the pathetic tale of "Jane Shore," and weaving the romantic and painful incidents of the "story of her life" into a modern play, Mr. Wills has judiciously discarded the objectionable features of the subject, the skillful dramatist making Jane rather the unwilling than the passive or consenting victim, forcibly abducted from her happy home by the machinations of the Duke of Gloucester, to revel in the dangerous splendor of a court, as a decoy to the King, to make him unpopular with the people. The story is thoroughly domestic throughout, and Mr. Wills altogether discards the episodes in the life of Jane Shore, her intrigues with Hastings, her influence in a corrupt court, and her unpopularity with the people, as represented in Rowe's fine tragedy. But he uses all his dramatic power in illustrating the anguish and suffering of the repentant wife, and the despair and grief of the forsaken husband. The efforts of the dramatist have been directed to show the contrast between Jane's position of sinister splendor and her misery when, as a hunted outcast, she is driven, cold, hungry, and wretched, from door to door, till she sinks, exhausted and dying, on the pitiless streets. The play, without depending in the least for the snatching of a surprise from sensational-ism, is as perfect in dramatic construction as it is remarkable for its strong human interest and intense poetic conception. The first act opens in the gorgeous abode of the mistress of the King, nobles and beggars alike waiting for her favors, which she distributes to all with unstinting and lavish hand. But soon a change is to come o'er the spirit of the dream, and concerning this Duke Richard, the cruel, cynical pleasure, half soliloquizes and half speaks to the crowd of courtiers and sycophants of the dying King:

Come hither, hither, all good people, come
To this great fancy fair, where grim King Death
Is auctioneer, and holdeth in his hand
A thigh-bone for his hammer. Catch the moment,
For favors, titles, places, now are up;
Now, going, going, and to-morrow gone!

The two young Princes are brought in, and while Jane is caressing one of them the Queen enters, and a capital scene of mutual recrimination takes place between her and him. The sun, however, has set. The King is dead; Jane is powerless. The nobles desert her, the beggars shrink from her; and, sinking to the dust in misery and despair, Jane finds only one friend in honest John Grist, a prosperous baker, who has known her and her husband in happier days. The fall of Jane is too truthfully summed up in these lines, spoken by Gloucester:

Poor puppet of the hour, thy reign is o'er:
Thou hast filled thy use; that use is past.
Thou art a shadow, a poor, worn-out dress,
Hung up for moths to eat; whose faded spangles
Tell of dead mummeries. Farewell, fallen star!
Thy sparkling trails in ooze, extinguished, black,
A shivered jelly, a mere splash—farewell.

The second act takes place in the house of Henry Shore, with his sister seated at work and engaged in grief by his absence. Honest John Grist turns the conversation to the lost mistress, and after a stern rebuke from Shore a penitent and careworn Jane is seen looking at him through the window, and a most affecting scene ensues between the repentant wife and the wronged but still doating husband. Perhaps the agony of two hearts and the stern result were never more powerfully expressed than in the following:

JANE.—Oh! there's no sin but mates it with a pardon!
Although the pardon laggeth years behind,
And travel wearily, and dew its path
With weeping; yet no tears are endless, hopeless—
My sin is not too great for an atonement.
SHORE.—'Tis the one sin that finds no expiation—
The wrong which 'tis abasement to forgive,
For manhood sickens at the thought of pardon;
For honor, vulture-like, feeds on the heart,
And shame becomes the hangman to true love,
And on the pillory burns its dearest audits.
All that was holy grown ridiculous,
A comic agony, a tragic farce—
The woman's victim, the world's laughing-stock.

Jane's sin is too heavy to be forgiven, and her lamentation was truly the outburst of the flooded misery of a broken heart:

It is not true, not true, thou knowest it.
You crush me—punish me!
Here I kneel in my shame and misery,
To beg one little glimpse of consolation.
Mine infant's smile, a little hour's talk
Of sweet love nonsense to it between kisses.
The abject in the street hath got her child,
And when all other faces look reproach
It giveth her a smile for free as God's pardon.
The felon mother ere she reach the scaffold
May clasp her babe all night till morn and death.
Where is my child? Oh, bring him out to me!
Just till I see if he remember me,
And then I'll wander off into the night,
And quit thee if thou wilt. Henry—my babe!
SHORE.—Thy babe—he's dead!

She gives a wild cry, and falls. But she recovers after he has gone, and finds a parchment on which he has written, "Great as the sin is, so shall be the pardon that Heaven forgives, I shall love again." Here is a motive for action, and Jane's object is henceforth to find a penance equal to the sin. By thwarting the Duke of Gloucester, in which he is assisted by the Duke of Gloucester, in which he is assisted by the Duke of Gloucester, in which he is assisted by

INTRODUCTORY OVERTURE.

MONDAY, March 29, 1875.

Easter Monday! All hail! Although for that matter we have had hail enough for one season, the latest instalment falling due on Friday, March 26. Brightly beautiful the sun rose upon the Sabbath which heralded in the Easter festivities, as the Son and Saviour rose from the gloom of the sepulchre, in which he was laid, more than eighteen hundred years ago, and ascended to "realms of eternal bliss." After the darkness and despair and misery which have made the past long and dreary winter one of the most deplorable and depressing on record, the opening days of the Easter holidays—glad with sunshine and invigorating with a healthful atmosphere—give promise of better days to come, and a general revival in the business interests of the country. The indications all point to a resump ion of trade and a renewal of that confidence which prevailed before the great house of Jay Cooke went down in storm and havoc in the early Fall of 1873. Our amusements are once more beginning to hum, the costume-healthy managers look hopeful, and people catch a glimpse of the silver lining to the dark and sombre clouds that have so long hovered over us. In the Great Metropolis Easter Monday opens with a grand series of attractions all along the line. Let us survey the field, and "nothing extenuate, nor aught set down in malice." Beginning with the old Bowery—which like the "Last Rose of Summer," is "left blooming alone" in the lower part of the city—we find new energies at work, and evidently fresh hands directing the good old ship which has weathered so many storms of fire and flood and devastation; and which, to-night, commences a voyage "Around h World in Eighty Days," a spectacular venture, in wh ch the vast deck and resources of the time-honored hulk will be brought into play, and all the nations of the earth will be developed as the voyage progresses.

Blow gently, breezes; wait on her way
The craft that binds us to the olden day.

Move we on forward where the Bowery meets its Spring, and there behold the spot made memorable by the liberal management and genial spirits of Tony Pastor, whose generosity has made happy many a despondent soul, and whose entertainments have given life and enjoyment to the poorer classes of society whose want of means confines them to the humble walks of amusements. But even here Easter witnesses a change, and the patrons of the Pastoral home lose Tony as a manager. He has catered long and well, and he has had his reward in a comfortable treasury and a gratified peoples. Tony took his leave of the old homestead on Saturday night last, and to-day he starts out on his Summer cruise.

Let earnest welcomes make his heart beat faster,
And songs of praise cheer on our generous Pastor.

And so we leave the classic shades of the Bowery, where once the great lights in dramatic lore shone resplendent, and minstrelsy under the guidance of the well-known Charley White, first had an abiding place in the city of New York. We take the tide at Broadway and drift along with the current. In vain we listen for the strains of "The Little German Band" that used to strike the ear at Broadway and Ann street, when Barnum ruled supreme where The Herald now lays down the law and the profits. And though we still have our 4-11-44, our good old "444" is numbered with the past, and night shades no longer witness the inpouring of the throngs that sought to greet La Thorne's and Butler's performers. All gone, all moving upward and onward. And we miss the lights that were wont to illumine the portals of Mechanics' Hall, 472 Broadway, the home of minstrelsy in the long ago. And the lights that shone inside—where are they? Where E. P. Christy, George Christy, Earl H. Pearce, Ben Mallory, and others of that band who never knew what it was to have a shallow house? Those we have named have passed away, gone to the hereafter. A feeling of sadness steals over us,

"When we remember all the friends, so linked together, We've seen around us fall like leaves in Wintry weather."

Well do we remember the early days of Brougham's Lyceum that stood on the west side of Broadway, a little below Broome street. It, too, has passed away as a place of amusement, and many of the performers who there appeared are "Down among the dead men!" Mary Taylor was one of Brougham's troupe, and Tom Johnson and Mrs. Vernon, and Laura Keene, and Charles Wolcott, and Mrs. Brougham. Their lights are shed, and all are dead; but the brave manager still lives, we are happy to say. John Brougham, a model man, but an unfortunate manager, will ever hold a place in our affections. His heart—ever open to the appeals of the distressed, ever sensitive to the calls of charity and friendship—is still "worn upon his sleeve for daws to peck at." Grand and genial John—may the day be far distant when we shall be called upon to mourn the loss of such a truly kind and generous man.

On thee, O John, may the years rest lightly—
"Friend of our earlier days."

Shall we take a look at the Theatre Comique? There is light and joy about the place, for the Hart beats Wild within. Henry Wood once held out here with his minstrel troupe, and a very pleasing entertainment he gave, too. It has seen many changes since the dark ones corked up as a troupe for the last time. It was here that poor James Lingard tried a short but unsuccessful season. Burnt out of the Newsboy, his after ventures brought him no returns; so, with lights dimmed and mind impaired, one night he took a leap in the dark, and the next day his body was found in the waters of the Hudson. Poor Lingard! Let our recollections of him be naught but good. And then Dan Bryant came with the little Theatre Comique, and he manages it well, else how could the worthy manager have amassed the houses and lands that now hedge him around and about? Ever alive to the exigencies of the times, Mr. Hart offers a rich and rare programme for the Easter holiday, a programme in which variety is the spice of life" and ability to make merry the beholder and auditor. We may talk of the "Glorious Seventh," and the ever-ready Seventy-first, and the "Gallant Sixty-ninth," but give to us the brave and patriotic "Mulligan Guards," who burst upon our sight at this cosy little armory. To this house

They by the strings will go—weep
To see the Hart ungalled play.

Shut up within the walls of the Metropolitan Hotel, quietly rests Niblo's Garden. "After life's fitful fever, it sleeps—well," until a fresh deal is had. When the city was young, Niblo's was the terminus of stage routes, and that Garden was somewhat "out of town" on the northern end. And after the lapse of many years it is almost "out of town," for theatrical purposes, on the southern slope. We shall not attempt to give even a summary of what has transpired on that historic spot. It has seen the best days and it has seen its best nights, and though the veteran Charles Thorne is the latest manager at the helm, and though he has shown energy, and tact, and industry, yet the idea of March were against him, and the old place went out with the tide that is ever surging at the southern confines of the ever-to-be-remembered land-mark of Niblo's.

Retrospection brings to life sweet memories of the past,
Which in the hearts of old New York will ever last.

Over the way is Grand Central, as it is now called—Metropolitan, of late—and westwhile the happy home of Frisco's "famed black band." And going back still farther, we find burlesque opera, and variety, and magical entertainments galore. Like "the doll's dressmaker" in "Our Mutual Friend"—no, Jimmy, not Moulton's work, but the lamented Dickens' work—Variety is now "trying on" to see if it is to be hoped that Charles may meet his reward now, as well as later. To-night he looms up largely for Easter times, and those who look for enjoyment at his grand centralization of talent will not seek in vain:

Step in, take a seat, and the evening stay—
You'll find rare enjoyment with Charley Shay.

More changes! Alas and alack! Here is the Olympic, looming up large as a variety theatre under the management of Cardinal Woolcot. Dear, dear, how one thing follows another as we "backward, turn backward, O Time, in thy flight!" Lady Laura Keene came with a bound when she assumed the management of this house years gone by. Her "Seven Sisters" jumped into favor at once, and all New York, young and old, went to see that sparkling show. Charley Peters, who pulled down the scale at two hundred, mayhap, was the lovely Cupid in this at that time gorgeous play; and Laura ruled the roast as the head devil of the divine "Seven." Cupid is dead, and Laura is dead, and—no more, no more; let us look at the survivors who have made their mark in the great firmament. Laura produced "Our American Cousin" at this house, and it was here, and in this play that E. A. Sothern came prominently into notice as Lord Dundreary. From this time, and from this theatre, he can date his success. And from here, too, can Eric Thorne has made a pronounced success by his artistic performance of Fluellen the Welchman, and has proven a valuable acquisition to the local stage.

A FAIR BUSINESS was done at the Grand Central Theatre during the expired week. The performances were all that could be desired. Frank Mayo in Irish specialties, concluding with a rattling clog-dance; juggling feats by the Langlois Brothers, with which our readers are already familiar; the three Arnold Brothers, in clog-dances, and, later in the evening, two of them in songs-and-dances; Alecia Jourdan, in male character songs, and the usual olio served by Sheridan and Mack, in their character duets; Shed Le Clair, in an excellent trapeze performance; and J. C. Stewart in the chief characters in "Eh! What Is It?" "Napoleon Hemmend In" and "A Happy Man," in which Mlle. Marietta Francisco and Sig. Novissimo danced a polka.

THE REGULAR SEASON at the Bowery Opera-house closed on March 27, and on that date Tony Pastor ended his management of that theatre. Billy Barry had a benefit on Tuesday evening, when every part of the auditorium was crowded, and many persons were unable to get even a sight of the stage. This condition of affairs was repeated on Thursday evening, when Frank Girard received his annual benefit. Both had a number of volunteers, and the performances passed off smoothly. Saturday evening was devoted to the benefit of the various attaches of the house, Johnny Allen, the only fresh appearance on March 22, met with a cordial reception as a dancer, and Sand-dance of "Nicodemus Johnson" was enthusiastically received. A Spring and Summer season is to be inaugurated on March 29 under the management of Billy Pastor.

"OFF THE STAGE," an original comedietta, in one act, by Frank Rosenfield, which was originally performed by the Thomas Dramatic Union in this city Feb. 13, 1875, has just been published by R. M. De Witt.

DAN BRYANT desires us to state that he has no intention of abandoning the minstrel stage, notwithstanding that reports to that effect have been largely circulated.

THE TIMES who attended the one hundredth representation of "The Two Orphans" at the Union-square Theatre on Saturday night last were severally presented with neat morocco albums containing photographs of many of the chief characters. The auditorium and vestibule were profusely decorated with flowers.

LEONA DARE, G. Swaine Buckley, Sophie and Irene Worrell, Walters and Morton, Prof. Nelson and his little sons Robert and Arthur, Nully Pieris and Harper and Stansil begin engagements at the Olympic Theatre March 29.

PAUL AND SONS, who are engaged to travel with John H. Murray's Railroad Circus during the coming tenting season, are to make their American debut at the Theatre Comique March 29, and on that evening the following fresh attractions will be added to the company: M. W. Leflingwell, the Richmond Sisters, Lou Libertazzi, Griffin and Rice, and Signor Cesareo Saurez.

MAURICE PIKE has assumed the stage management of the Bowery Theatre.

ANGIE SCHOTT, Mark Grayson, Hector and Fane (who are to travel with J. H. Murray's Circus the coming season), Barnes and West, and Foster and Dudley will comprise the novelties at the Grand Central Theatre this week.

A SPRING SEASON will be commenced at the Bowery Opera-house March 29, with the following company: Iona Lang, James Norton, the twin sisters French, Ben Dodge, Joseph Cummings, Maggie Deuler, Scanlan and Cronin, John Denier, C. Fox, Matt McCormack, Charley Lord, Signor Doneg, the German Brothers, Charles Seabert, A. Denier and Master Lew.

RENA and Fred G. Maeder are to act in "Castle Garden" at Wood's Museum at the evening performances, and Louise Sylvester at the matinees in "Wildcat," during this week.

BARNUM'S ROMAN HIPPODROME is to be reopened March 29 for a season of two weeks only. Among the chief features will be "The Fete at Pekin," with new costumes, trappings, etc.; "A Vision of the Houris," during which there will be an Amazonian march by two hundred ladies clad in new armors of gold and silver leather; "Indian Life," a dance for the Wild, with new costumes; and a walking match between W. E. Harding and Mlle. Lola. All the chariots have been regilded, and new and gorgeous harnesses have been made for the horses. The scale of cheap prices of admission will be adhered to.

A CHARITY MATINEE is to be given by Augustin Daly at his Fifth-avenue Theatre on Thursday, April 1, in aid of the Central Dispensary of New York. The programme will include scenes from "The Big Bonanza;" H. J. Montague and Miss Ada Dyas in "The Happy Pair;" Sol Smith Russell in a monologue entertainment; Frank Mayo, Rose Eytinge and members of the Park Theatre Company in "A Bull in a China Shop," and a minstrel entertainment by Dan Bryant and his band.

MR. AND MRS. SCOTT-SIDDONS sailed for Europe in the City of Chester March 27.

THE SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS have made a few changes in their programme since our last report, and have been doing a fair business. Carl Rudolph in the first part sang "I was Fishing in My Sleep," and in the olio Mackin and Wilson gave a double song-and-dance called "Go West." "Laughing Gas" was revived, and Arthur Bent performed a cornet solo.

J. M. NIXON'S benefit at the Hippodrome on March 20 was very largely attended, and a handsome sum of money was added to the right side of the cash account of that popular performer and ex-manager.

CLLENDER'S GEORGIA MINSTRELS closed their brief season in this city at Robinson Hall with the performances of Saturday evening last. Their success was pronounced, and, had not the hall been previously rented to other parties, we doubt not that their season might have been continued for a number of weeks, with profit to themselves and gratification to the public. An entire change of programme was given during the closing week, which proved quite as attractive as any hitherto presented.

HARRY MINER is to have charge of the Bowery Opera-house, representing Tony Pastor during his absence.

COL. T. ALLSTON BROWN, dramatic agent, 9 West Fourth street, advertises for variety talent for the Bowery Opera-house and for specialty artists for Mlle. Cora Estel's Novelty and Cancan Troupe, which will start on a tour South and West on April 26. The Cawthorne Children can also be engaged through his agency.

A LADY WASHINGTON RECEPTION—ST. JOHN'S GUILD.—A committee of St. John's Guild, composed of more than two hundred of our prominent citizens, intend holding a Lady Washington reception at the Academy of Music on Tuesday, April 6. A representation will be given of the reception held by President and Mrs. Washington in New York City ninety years ago. There will be thirteen refreshment tables representing the original thirteen States, and each will be attended by thirteen ladies dressed in the costumes of that period. Some of the ladies will appear in the dresses that their great-grandmothers wore in the last century. A tableau of Huntington's Republican Court, en costume, will be presented. The Massachusetts table will be attended almost entirely by descendants of John Adams. The cups and saucers used on this occasion will bear the Washington crest. It is suggested that visitors who can will come dressed in the ancient costume, as many have signified their intention to do. The object is a very praiseworthy one, viz., to procure funds for a floating hospital for sick children.

EUGENE arrived in this city from England on Wednesday, March 24. Being the sole legatee of the late James Unsworth, he has visited the city to obtain possession of his will, which was deposited with the Stuyvesant Safe Deposit Company. He will shortly return to England to claim the property bequeathed him by his former partner, they having each made a will in favor of the other.

MANAGER DUFFY has lifted the Olympic Theatre to prominent position among the first-class variety theatres of this country. Indomitable energy in presenting fresh attractions, and liberality in engaging the very best available talent and in presenting a number of fresh faces each week, have secured this result. The confidence of the public has been gained, and the management is reaping a fitting pecuniary reward. On March 22, Miss Ada Alexander, a clever serio-comic and ballad vocalist, who won the approbation of the public: Venus and Adonis, two clever little midgets, who display no little skill in velocipede riding; J. H. Bartley, who excels as a bone soloist; and Herr Karl Lind, whose equilibristic acrobat feats have never been excelled in this country, began engagements.

AT BRYANT'S MINSTRELS the only changes since our last report included the singing of "The Soap-fat Man" by Dave Reed in the first-part, and the revival of "The New Prima-donna" and "Masks and Faces" in the olio. A fair business has been done.

MISS MARIAN TAYLOR, member of the company at Bidwell's Academy of Music, New Orleans, La., during the past season, has arrived in town, and during the Summer will receive dramatic instruction from Miss Fanny Morant.

THE ONE HUNDREDTH PERFORMANCE of "The Two Orphans" at the Union-square Theatre occurred on Saturday evening, March 27, when every lady entering the theatre was presented with a souvenir of the occasion. The advance sale of seats was so large that a portion of the gallery was reserved and seats sold therein by coupon tickets for $1.50 each. Many persons who failed to secure places in advance were unable to procure admission even.

HUGH FAY began an engagement at Wood's Museum on the evening of March 22, acting in "The Fastest Boy in New York," which ran until Thursday evening, when "The Irish Detective" was substituted, and acted until Saturday night. Both these dramas have been hitherto acted in this theatre. James Barnes, the efficient stage-manager, received his annual benefit on Saturday at both matinee and evening performances, when the following bill was presented on both occasions: "Under False Colors," a drama written by A. H. Mallon, in which that popular comedian reappeared and acted a prominent character; Louise Sylvester was seen as the Pirate Queen; Miss Emily Maynard sang ballads; Louis Aldrich recited Drake's "Address to the American Flag;" and Hugh Fay acted in "School." At the evening matinee Louise Sylvester acted in "The Ragpicker of Paris."

THE PARK THEATRE has been comfortably filled during the expired week with audiences who appeared to be well pleased with Frank Mayo's natural and manly impersonation of the hero in the late Frank Boucicault's American drama entitled "Old Crockett." Our readers have been made familiar with the merits of this drama and of Mr. Mayo therein by frequent reviews by our correspondents in various parts of the country. It was elegantly mounted with new and picturesque scenery from the pencil of William Voegtlin, and the support in the stock company was in every way satisfactory, as each and every individual member did his or her best to aid in its success. Mr. Mayo and Miss Rosa Rand by their frequent repetition of the leading characters have acquired that artistic ease which lends a charm to them. The asperities have been toned down, and their positive impersonations are thoroughly lifelike and natural. The drama bids fair to hold the stage of this theatre for some time to come.

THE GRAND OPERA-HOUSE is to be opened March 29 for the production of Mrs. Dunn's spectacular drama entitled "Ahmed." The principal characters will be impersonated by the Misses Katie Mayhew, Jessie Allaire and Estelle and A. Mortimer; Messrs. Eugene Egberts, Welsh Edwards, George Atkins, Frank Foster. In the grand ballets Mlle. Morlacchi, Annetta Galetti, and Rachel De Francesco will appear. Wm. Withers, who will lead the orchestra, has composed and arranged all the music of the spectacle, which will be produced under the personal supervision of the veteran manager Joseph C. Foster.

JAMES BARTLETT has acted the character of William in "Black Eyed Susan" at Booth's Theatre since F. B. Warde sailed for England.

ALEXANDER HERMANN, the well-known magician, was married by Mayor W. H. Wickham, on March 27, to Miss Adelaide Scarsey, an English actress.

NIBLO'S GARDEN has succumbed to bad business and its doors are closed.

DRAMATIC.

CINCINNATI DRAMATIC AFFAIRS to March 26 are described by our correspondent as appended: "At the Grand Opera-house Maggie Mitchell opened on Monday in 'Fanchon,' which was kept on three nights, 'The Pearl of Savoy' being given on Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings; 'Fanchon' for Saturday's matinee, and the stock company in 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' forming the attraction for the matinee Wednesday. Maggie Mitchell is the same bewitching sprite as of yore, seeming as young as ever, and charming all with her mingled pathos and abandon. Her traveling support, William Harris, has made an excellent impression as Landgraf Pfeffel, being conscientious, correct actor, with a very pleasing presence and voice. The Didier of R. E. Graham, Father Barbeaud of Frank Bosworth, Madelon of Mary Davenport, old Fadet of Helen Mathews, Mother Barbeaud of Mrs. Bosworth, and Suzette of Alice Rowley were all unexceptionable. The scenery in both pieces was fresh and pretty. Although this is the last week in Lent, the attendance has been large. Miss Mitchell will remain another week, and will be followed by Ada Gaddis, a recent debutante, formerly a resident of this city, whose engagement will terminate the regular season. At Woods' Theatre Mr. Callahan's drama of "Scarlet and Green" was advertised, but Lucille Western, whose engagement had been prior, came to time, and was substituted. Her repertory for the week has been 'East Lynne' Monday, 'Leah' Tuesday, 'Child-stealer' Wednesday and Thursday, and 'Oliver Twist' the remainder of the week. Miss Western's merits are too well known to need mention, as are those of her veteran travelling support, William Whalley. Of the regular company, Mollie Maeder, Lizzie Pierson, Charlotte Crampton, Ella Mayer, Little Josie Fox, L. F. Barrett, H. H. Wood, F. H. Lord, Ferd Hight, F. Percy, A. Z. Chipman, F. T. Denvil and J. T. Craven were commendable. In the absence of Mr. Sheldon, John Marble was engaged for the comedy parts, and was warmly received. Attendance light. Miss Western closes to-morrow, 27th. On the 29th Baker and Farron ..... At Robinson's the German-opera Company continues to give three performances per week. 'Orpheus Aux Enfers' being the attraction for to-night."

FORD'S OPERA-HOUSE, Washington, D. C., was occupied by the Majilton Combination during the past week. They appeared in their amusing specialty "Ding Dong," and the farce of "The Laughing Hyena." The attendance was as good as could have been expected in that city during the last week of Lent. The company returns to New York City from there. April 5, Lester Wallack in "Rosedale." ..... At the National Theatre Mr. Albert W. Aiken appeared in his drama "The Witches of New York," and endeavored to pull through the week, but empty chairs proved too much for his stoical philosophy, and he pulled up stakes after Thursday night. "Giroffe-Girofla" will be produced by Grau & Chizzola's Opera-bouffe Company March 29, and during the week.

FRANK FRAYNE'S COMBINATION commenced an engagement of six nights at the Richmond, Va., Theatre March 22, in the play entitled "Si Slocum." In one of the scenes Mrs. Frayne shoots an apple from her husband's hand, and he in turn shoots one from off her head, with his back turned, getting his aim from a small piece of looking-glass, which is fixed upon the opposite side of the stage. In the second act, where Jerry Blackburn, a negro, is hung, Mr. Frayne releases him by cutting the rope with a bullet. His dog Jack is more thoroughly trained than any other dog we have ever seen, and his every appearance was the signal for rounds of applause. Mr. Frayne was well supported by the regular stock. Messrs. R. M. Sheridan, W. H. Young, Geo. Denham, Chas. Stanley, and the Misses Partington and Sanford being particularly good. W. H. Young deserves credit for the appropriate settings of the stage. There has been only a fair attendance during the week. John Thompson opens March 29 for one week with "On Hand." Letter of March 27.

SHERRY'S VARIETIES presented Lotta from appearing as advertised at De Bar's Opera-house, St. Louis, Mo., on March 22, and the week was filled by E. A. Locke, who appeared each night in "Rip Van Winkle." The setting was good and the cast excellent. Mr. Locke's acting showed much painstaking, and a new conception of the role. The attendance was fair. The Derrick Von Beekman of Chas. Krone was well acted; the Gretchen of Miss Lucy Sinclair displayed good taste and talent; Little Hendrick by Grace Jones was particularly noticeable, as to both acting and voice, which have improved in a wonderful degree of late. Lotta will certainly appear March 29. Advices dates 25.

LARGE AUDIENCES have been the rule at the Opera-house, Albany, N. Y., since John T. Raymond opened on March 22, in "The Gilded Age." The engagement throughout has been attended with success, and on the whole may be set down as one of the most satisfactory, financially and otherwise, of the season. Mr. Raymond evinces intelligence and good judgment in his conception of the impecunious Col. Sellers, while his embodiment of the character is very humorous without being in the slightest degree exaggerated. The support was competent and praiseworthy. Florence Chase as Laura Hawkins acted in such a fervid, forcible manner that she was rewarded with several hearty rounds of applause. Waverley was very good as George Selby, Learock gentlemanly and efficient as Clay Hawkins, Eugene Eberle competent as Si Hawkins, F. Morris, funny as Uncle Daniel, and Mrs. Eberle as usual first-class as Mrs. Hawkins. A. W. Glenn, who accompanies the star, made a favorable impression by his unctuous performance of the District-attorney, while Annie Mostyn, W. J. Shea, Harry Albert, and Julian Mitchell, who completed the cast, did the little required of them quite satisfactorily. On March 29 Olive Logan begins an engagement..... G. L. Fox and Pantomime Company appear at Martin Hall April 2, 3. Advices of March 27.

MISS LILLIE ELDRIDGE and the Union-squre Combination, under the management of George Wilton, are to begin at Hartford, Ct., March 29, a tour of the New England circuit, playing "The Two Orphans." The company will be the same as that recently on the road under the same management, save that C. W. Butler will replace William Scallan, and Miss Fanny Burt succeeds Miss Augusta Raymond. They will be at Worcester, Mass., April 1, 2.

STARS and combinations desiring time during the season of 1875-6 the Memphis, Tenn., Theatre are requested to address T. W. Davey, as per card in another column.

AT THE VARIETIES THEATRE, New Orleans, LA., the play entitled "Was She Right?" retained the boards, with Mrs. F. S. Chanfrau in the role of Emily Prescott. On March 22 was brought out for the first time in New Orleans the play entitled 'Jealousy.' Mrs. Chanfrau in the role of Clara Northrop presented another of those choice pictures of the emotional school with which her repertoire abounds, and which are always attractive. The cast was a good one, the setting of the LEFFINGWELL delighted the Trojans the past week with a round of his peculiar characterizations, opening a week's engagement at the Opera-house March 22 in "Hot Coals" and "Romeo Jaffier Jenkins," which were repeated 23. "Billiards" was presented 24, 25, and "Aladdin" 26, 27. The support rendered by the stock company was as good, Messrs. Fannin and Gregory and the Misses Bonfiace, Russel, and Peterson being worthy of special mention. Attendance during the week averaged fair. Mr. and Mrs. Harry Watkins commence March 29. Mr. W. H. Lytell and wife (Blanche Mortimer) and Emily Vincent, three very capable people, quit the company 20. Miss Louise Paterson and Mrs. Frank Rooney take the place of the retiring people, and Mr. A. W. Gregory will probably assume low-comedy roles.

"THE TWO ORPHANS" will be produced at Hooley's Comedy Theatre, Chicago, Ill., July 5, with Charles R. Thorne Jr., McKee Rankin, T. E. Morris, H. W. Montgomery, F. F. Mackay, Kate Claxton, Kittie Blanchard, and Mrs. Wilkins—of the Union-square Theatre Company—in the cast.

AT MRS. MORRISON'S GRAND Opera-house, Toronto, Ont., Miss Neilson's second visit marks an era in the history of Toronto theatricals. Nine performances in all have been given, each attended by an average audience of 1,500 people, and this attests not only the power of Miss Neilson to "draw," but the presence of a class that may be relied upon, far exceeding in number that usually accredited to a city of this size. March 22 "Measure for Measure" was produced for the first time in Toronto. For her farewell on Wednesday, March 24, "The Lady of Lyons" was the attraction, the theatre being packed in every part, and hundreds being unable to gain an entrance. The first three acts produced recalls, and at the conclusion of the fourth act the drop-scene had to be raised four times. Numerous baskets of flowers and bouquets in profusion were bestowed upon her, and to these were added a couple of cages containing canaries. Her support has been good throughout. Those sterling members of the stock, Mr. J. B. Fuller and Miss Mary Carr gained fresh laurels as Col. Damas and Madame Deschappelles. The stock filled out the week. T. G. Riggs opens Easter Monday in "Arrah-na-Pogue." Letter of March 29.

J. H. STODDART and company are to perform at Elmira, N. Y., March 29, Binghamton 30, Ithaca 31, Auburn April 1, Seneca Falls 2, Syracuse 3, Rochester 5, one week.

WIGHT'S COMEDY COMPANY opened a new hall at Muskegon, Mich., March 22, and performed there during the past week, and are to continue this; thence to Big Rapids April 5, one week. Fred Felton recently joined the company as leading man.

THE JACK AND JILL Pantomime Troupe were at Montgomery, Ala., March 25, Mobile 26, 27, and show at New Orleans, La., this week.

OUR SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., correspondence concerning amusements, and dated March 20, is appended:

Numerous and varied entertainments were to be seen during the past week, and in the absence of novelty little interest was attached to them in the mind of the dramatic chronicler. "Little" Nell "the California Diamond," who was announced to be appearing after a ten years' sojourn, began an engagement at the California Theatre on March 15. Her early career here is not well remembered, and those who recall it are mostly professionals with whom she was associated. To the public here she is, therefore, a newcomer, and took of a debut. It is not irrelevant to suggest that it is about time she dropped the sobriquet under which she is known to the stage. Certainly, mainly, very few were prepared to see a young lady of such womanly form and manners as "Little Nell" embodies. She has drawn fair audiences during the week, and has won that kind of favor which is usually gained by a pretty face and by talents that find expression in song-and-dance, and banjo-playing. "No Name" forms the vehicle for her specialties. W. A. Mestayer, whose reappearance was announced by enthusiastic appliance, played the villain, Earl of Dorquet, very well, and Mr. Robert Pateman in the character of Leander Garnett gave a graphic and finished portrayal of a part in all those very presence was redolent of the briny deep. Next week "Little Nell appears in "The Hidden Hand" and "Uncle Tom's Cabin." March 29, Miss Katharine Rogers will begin her engagement with Bronson Howard's play. The second week she will be joined by Mr. John McCullough, who will play Cardinal Wolsey to her Queen Katharine. The scenic revival of "King John" will probably take place on April 12..... Mrs. Oates' Troupe continued to appear in "The Pretty Perfumer" at Maguire's Theatre until March 18, when a change was made, the company then appearing in Buckstone's military drama "The Child of the Regiment." This familiar piece, with considerable introduced music, was given with fine spirit, and has since its production attracted numerous and enthusiastic audiences. The singing, especially that by Harry Allen, C. H. Drew, W. H. Woodfield and Mrs. Oates, was thoroughly enjoyable. "The Princess of Trobizonde" will be produced March 22..... The Spanish Minstrel Troupe still nightly fill the Opera-house. They play two weeks longer and then start off for Chicago, Ill., under engagement to Mr. R. M. Hooley. The Minstrels' place in the Opera-house will be filled by Mr. Hooley's comedy company now at Chicago. Possibly the entire company will not leave, but such leading performers as Billy Emerson, Ben Cotton, Billy Rice, Billy Arlington, Eddie Mack, J. L. Lumbo, Campbell and Booker, Ernest Linden, J. F. Oberist, J. G. Russell and W. F. Tilla will be sure to go. .....Notwithstanding the large and powerful company engaged at the Bella Union Hall Palace Amphitheatre, and notwithstanding the presence of many other attractions, Mr. Montgomery Queen has pitched his circus tent on Jackson street, preparatory to opening a season on March 29. He has chosen W. Fish to pit against James Robinson at the Amphitheatre, and the high rivalry between these world-celebrated bareback riders will be the cause of considerable running high among amusement-going people. The Amphitheatre met with good business during the past week, the programme, which included the performances of Mr. Robinson, Mlle. Dazie De Glorions and Omar Kingsley, being unusually attractive. Romeo Sebastian has left Wilson to fill a long-standing contract with Queen..... McDonough's Royal Marionettes continue at Platt's Hall to a drawing fair, but not large audiences.....The Alleghanians, under the management of Mr. D. G. Waidron, commence a season at Pacific Hall on March 22..... The principal attractions now at the Bella Union Theatre are W. C. Crosbie the comedian as Jacques Strop in the old melodrama of "Robert Macaire," Jenny and Baby Benson in songs and dances, Lizzie Watson and Mary Graham in musical sketches and William H. Warner in minstrel business.....A small hall on Geary street near Kearney, capable of holding about two hundred and fifty persons, will be opened to-night under the title of the Palace Varieties. The company engaged includes Johnny Tuers, Harry Howard, Matt Kelly, Morris Welch, Ida Fisk, Mollie Marline, Maggie Kelly, Annie Williams and Miss St. Leon.....Ben Cotton, Billy Rice and J. G. Russell take farewell benefits at the Opera-house during the week beginning March 22..... The Lingard and Howard Paul company is expected before the close of the month. Not being under engagement to any of the managers, the company will undoubtedly play at one of the halls for the ride and accept of its managers, as Mr. J. Keene and Bella Pateman of the California Theatre commence a star engagement at Sacramento on March 22 in "The New Magdalen"..... Miss Katharine Rogers began an engagement of three nights at Sacramento as Julia in "The Hunchback," supported by Mr. A. D. Billings as Master Walter, Charles Edmonds as Clifford, Geo. Giddens as Fathom, and Miss Sydney Cowell as Helen.....The new theatre at Portland, Oregon, is to be opened on the 23d under the management of Mr. J. H. LeRoy, with the following company: Mr. and Mrs. Osborne Adams, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Whiffen, Blanche Galton, Ada Deaves, Nellie Deaves, and others not named.....Charles Vivian's company is playing at Pelton's, in San Diego County.....The Wheeler Comedy Company is at San Luis Obispo.....Unus Morrell has engaged a minstrel troupe to travel through the County.

FROM BOSTON, MASS., our customary advices, dated March 27, are as appended:

At the Globe, for Janauschek's last week, she has given a repetition of dramas previously played, together with one new character, Katharine, that of "Henry VIII." This was presented on Monday evening, and proved but a fair success. Her support was very bad, the company appearing to the worst advantage during the engagement. A. H. Bradley was indisposed, and was unable to act as good. His delivery was short and quick, and raised many a laugh at his own expense. G. D. Chaplin as Cardinal Wolsey was painstaking, and there was a certain dignity in his action; but he was not otherwise satisfactory. Minnie Monk, fortunately, had little to do as Anne Bullen. W. G. Shine was conscientious and excellent, as was Augustus Thorne as Thomas Taylor. Her support was dry and hard, but was not unpleasantly conspicuous. The trouble was that the company didn't fit the play at all—a trouble that frequently happens in any but a better company than this. On Tuesday "Medea" was given; Wednesday, "Queen Wold;" Thursday, a repetition of "Henry VIII;" Friday, "Mary Stuart;" this afternoon, "The Earl of Essex," and to-night "We are to have "Deborah" again. Business has been fair. On March 29 Ristori opens an engagement, remaining until Tuesday evening, April 6. She plays Elizabeth, Monday; Tuesday, "Marie Antoinette;" Wednesday, "Lucretia Borgia;" Thursday, "Medea;" Friday, "Mary Stuart;" and for her farewell appearance, Saturday afternoon, "Marie Antoinette." Carlotta Leclercq is in town, and will appear Saturday evening, April 3, in "The Hunchback," supported by Josie Orton, W. R. Floyd (who, by the way, made his "positively only appearance in Boston" at this theatre Washington's Birthday), D. W. Waller, C. H. Vandenhoff and a stock company specially engaged. Mrs. Rousby appears Wednesday evening, April 7. She will be followed by Charlotte Cushman, and she by John T. Raymond. The latter brings with him H. S. Murdock, W. E. Sheridan and Marie Gordon.....At the Boston, Boothby's second week has shown him in "Hamlet," "Richard III," "Brutus," "The Merchant of Venice," "The Stranger" and "Katharine and Petruchio." The houses have been overflowing. Thursday George Riddle appeared with him as Titus in "Brutus," and acquitted himself so well that he was called before the curtain. Gustavus Levick appeared last night as Benvolio in place of Mr. Riddle, who was ill. During the present week, which is Mr. Booth's last, the following announcements are made: "Richelieu" Monday and Wednesday, "Hamlet" Tuesday, "Richard III" Thursday, "Apostate" and "Taming the Shrew" Friday, "Richelieu" Saturday afternoon, and "Richard III" in the evening. Dion Boucicault appears April 5 in "The Shaughraun," and will receive the support of the Barry-Sullivan Dramatic Museum Company played "School" on March 29 for the first time, and have done very fairly with it. W. J. Le Moyne as Beau Farintosh, the original representative of the part in Boston, played it excellently. His whole bearing was admirable. As Jack Poyntz, Charley Barron was light, easy, and very pleasing. W. H. Crisp as Lord Beaufoy played well, and Annie Clarke as Bella was very charming. Clara Belmont as Tighe was in her element, bright and piquant, and R. F. McClannin as Mr. Sutcliffe was painstaking and pleasing. J. Burrows was hardly up to Mr. Cruz, and the rest of the cast varied from fair to good, making for a pleasing, large house greeted Charley Barron on the occasion of his benefit, when "The Iron Chest" and "The Honeymoon" were given. To-night "Romeo and Juliet" will be played, and on March 29 "Feep o' Day" will be revived. Kate Ethel and Elmer Warner appeared in "The Lady of Lyons" in Kennedy Hall, Roxbury, Thursday night..... Oliver Doud Byron played "Across the Continent" Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday at the Howard Athenæum, and "Donald McKay" Thursday, Friday and to-day. He received the support of Kate Byron as Isabel Wallace, and Lillie Wilkinson as Jerome. Among the company, Marie Keene and Bella Pateman of the California Theatre commence a star engagement at Sacramento on March 22 in "The New Magdalen"..... Miss Katharine Rogers began an engagement of three nights at Sacramento as Julia in "The Hunchback," supported by Mr. A. D. Billings as Master Walter, Charles Edmonds as Clifford, Geo. Lamb was very clever as Daniel Webster Hartshorn, and Harry Bloodgood exceedingly funny as Montgomery Gloster. Incidental to the drama the Grattan Light Guard, under the command of Captain J. B. Reardon, appeared in a drill. Afterwards Walters and Morton appeared in songs and dances, and the entertainment closed with the sketch "Life On the Mississippi," in which School-craft, Bloodgood, Coes, Walters and Morton took part. March 29 Buffalo Bill and Kit Carson jr. open, and the fun will be furnished by a sketch entitled "The Spelling Match," in which all the comedians will appear. Karl Lind also opens.....At the Boylston Museum "A Kiss in the Dark" was played afternoon and evening throughout the week. The Burgess Minstrels and the Boston Quartet open March 29.....Billy Crane of Hooley's, Chicago, is in town.

THE TENNESSEE JUBILEE SINGERS vocalized at East Saginaw, Mich., March 21, to good business, at the Academy of Music. A concert was tolerated on the Sabbath evening, inasmuch as it was advertised that the net proceeds were to be used in furnishing a colored church somewhere in Virginia. Whether a dodge or not it worked well, so states our correspondent under date of March 24.

VARIETY HALLS.

THOMAS ROSA, the De Angelis Family and Miss Millie La Fount were the new arrivals at the Vaudeville Theatre, Louisville, Ky., March 22, where business has been larger than for several weeks past. Miss Sallie De Angelis, an old favorite, appeared in her sensational drama entitled "Out of the Rain," and received a hearty welcome. Later in the evening she appeared in songs and costume changes, and received many encores. Master Thomas Rosa exhibited his feats of contortion, which are good. John De Angelis was seen to advantage in the laughable sketch of "Strolling Actors." Miss La Fount appeared to advantage in serio-comic songs. Her repertoire is fresh and pleasing, and while she has not a strong voice, it is quite sweet. This is her last week. Under the Vaudeville will be run as a strictly variety theatre, the managers having decided to turn their attention to dramas, combined with some of the best specialty artists in the variety business that can be engaged. E. F. Barnes will be leading man and stage-manager, and Miss Dora Walton has been secured for leading parts. Several other people will be engaged for the stock company. Lorettie Mattice and Jennie Oates close March 27. Gilday and Gineven depart on same date for Cleveland. Minnie Rainforth, Jennie Leslie, Dora Walton and E. F. Barnes are billed for March 29. Advices of March 25.

AT THE GAIETY THEATRE, New Orleans, La., the event of the past week was the appearance, on March 22, of Kearney and Moran, faces entirely new to playgoers there, and whose Irish sketches and songs-and-dances were exceedingly well received. The company as now organized embraces the following talent: Stage-manager, Mr. Charles O. White; Miss Chrissie Morrell and Miss Lillie Howard, serio-comiques; Miss Lizzie Stemple, skipping-rope dancer; Mlle. Albertine and Miss Polly Barrett; dancers; Happy McCaslin, Tom Clarmon, Geo. Sisson and Wm. H. Trimble. Jennie La Varnie is announced for an early appearance.

BAIN BINDLEY, the juvenile character and specialty artist, assisted by her father, Prof. Bindley, in his specialties, opens at the Theatre Comique, Washington, D. C., April 5, Philadelphia, Pa., 19. They are desirous of forming an engagement for the Summer season, and can be addressed as per card.

CHARLEY KONOLLMAN, Dutch comique, whose address is now at this office, states that he desires to be hereafter known as Charley Dego.

ELLA ESMOND and Archie White, who are now performing in Wilmington, Del., can be addressed care of this office.

AN ADVERTISER wants a partner for song-and-dance and clog business.

MANAGERS desiring to engage Burton Stanley, male soprano and female character actor, for vacant dates can address W. C. Mitchell, as per card. Mr. Stanley is very favorably spoken of by The St. Louis Democrat of March 12.

NICOLARIS, vocalist, can be engaged for vacant dates through her agent, Col. T. Allston Brown.

JOSH HART states through our business department that, being unable to travel this Summer, he has sold to John Wild the right to use the name of the Theatre Comique Combination from 514 Broadway, New York.

HARRY KENNEDY, ventriloquist, who is very favorably noticed by the Brooklyn, N.Y., press, and recommended by J. J. McClosky, stage-manager of Col. Sinn's Park Theatre, can be addressed care of this office.

MANAGER SHELBY of Buffalo, N. Y., has had very large houses the past week to pay him for introducing so large a company. The Richmond Sisters go to Albany; also the "Henri Family," who made a decided hit. Bryant and Williams and the Victorelli Brothers closed their engagement March 27. This week Cotton and Birdue, Kitty Whitland, the Langoss Brothers, and Scott and Ross are to appear.

A LADY VOCALIST, one who can play the cornet, and other performers are wanted by G. H. De Castro, manager of the De Castro Troupe, who also advertises that the would like to hear from Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Florance. A complimentary notice of this company from the Lynchburg press can be found elsewhere.

AT THE BARTON OPERA-HOUSE, Syracuse, N.Y., now run by W. B Smith, with Den Howe as stage-manager, the company during the past week consisted of the Daleys—Tommy, Willie and Viney—song-and-dance and triple clog; Miss Rena Florence, balladist; Charles Vincent, comedian; Miss Annie Arnetti, serio-comic; Charles Whiting, negro comedian; Miss Kitty Whitland, song-and-dance; J. S. Murphy, Dutch and Irish comedian; the Waite Sisters in burlesque sketches and character duets; Marie Jasper, protean actress; Den Howe and Lillie Howe, Dutch specialists and comedians. The Waite Sisters conclude March 27, and open in Providence, R. I.

MIKE GALLAGHER, "guide" and specialty artist, etc., lately with Flaherty's Mirror of Ireland, will be at liberty after April 13. See card.

HARRY OSBORNE, comedian and vocalist, is open for engagements for the Summer season. Managers are referred to his card elsewhere.

THE CLARK BROTHERS commence a three weeks' engagement at the Vaudeville Theatre, Louisville, Ky., on March 29.

KIRCHHOFF AND McBRIDE, Dutch and Irish specialty artists, desire an engagement, and can be addressed as per card.

PETER AND WHITE, song-and-dance performers, are to commence an engagement in Cleveland, O., April 5.

AT THE VARIETIES, Norfolk, Va., Minnie Lee and Little Della began engagements on March 22.

GUY LINTON and Lucy Adams, vocalists, dancers and sketch artists, can be addressed at Deagle's Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., where they are at present performing.

FIRST-CLASS ARTISTS, sensational stars and combinations desiring engagements at Trimble's Varieties Theatre, Pittsburg, Pa., are requested to address he manager, as per advertisement.

LYCEUM OPERA-HOUSE, St. John's, N. B., will be reopened on April 19, and first-class artists are requested to communicate with the proprietor, Pete Lee, whose address find in another column.

DAVIS & Co., theatrical agents, Cincinnati, O., advertise for performers, and state that they can furnish talent to managers.

AT THE ODEON, Baltimore, Md., the programme for the week beginning March 22 introduced the following new people: Harry Fox, comedian; Annie Rochefort and Kitty Rowell, vocalists; and Helen Revere, jig-dancer. Harry Fox and Annie Rochefort rendered a pretty duet, entitled "Sweethearts." Kitty Rowell sang a few pretty selections, and Helen Revere executed several dances. Ada Flood and Dan Mason closed March 27. Johnny Reese opens 29th, and Agnes Sutherland and Sallie St. Clair April 5. Attendance good. Frank Cushman takes a benefit April 1.

AT TRIMBLE'S VARIETIES THEATRE, Pittsburg, Pa., John Queen, Billy West, Miss Sadie Connelly and Bobby Daily were the newcomers on March 22. Mr. Queen did "The Dancing-master" artistically, and the banjo-playing, songs and sayings of Mr. West were duly appreciated. These gentlemen, later in the evening, appeared in "Corporal Jim and I," which was enjoyable, and provoked hilarity. Miss Connely appeared in songs-and-dances, which, in the main, were as meritorious as such performances generally are when given by those of her sex. Mr. Daily made a good impression in his specialty of "The Fat Men's Ball," and he and Miss Connelly afterwards entertained the audience with their sketch of "Life in the Streets." Miss Belmont was re-engaged for one week longer, and she, and Cassim and Fritz, the Weston Sisters, Joe Lang, Ned Campbell, Miss Lucy Clifton, G. W. Herman, H. W. Williams, etc., were seen in their several specialties, the entertainment closing with the drama of "Brigands of California." Business very fair. The engagements of Cassim and Fritz, the Weston Sisters, and Clara Belmont expire on the 27th inst. Those opening on the 29th are Baker and Doyle, Lillian Sisters, Harry Bryant and John T. Kelly. Correspondence dated March 26.

AT THE GRAND CENTRAL, Philadelphia, Mr. Joseph M. Mortimer has undoubtedly done well; and should he continue management in future only be distinguished by liberality and zeal which he now displays, he surely count upon many such large and well-satisfied audiences as those which were assembled during the week ending March 27. Miss Jennie Hughes was announced, but failed to appear, on account of sickness, and Miss Jennie Engle proved an acceptable substitute. The Cawthorne Children, Herbert and Joe, are exceedingly clever in their specialties, and their performance was well appreciated. The other features of attraction were Rickey and Barney in "Boyhood Days" and "The Mulcahey Twins," and the ballet troupe led by Mlle. De Rosa and Leontine. Miss Jennie Engle, Miss Maggie Claire, Rickey and Barney, and Ben Dodge terminated engagements March 27. Lulu Delmay, Kitty Henderson and George F. Moore, William Carleton and Prof. Mitchell open March 29, when will be produced Mons. Zavistowski's new ballet of Pianella, and the Irish drama of "Shandy Maguire."

A. H. SEARLES, aerial gymnast, whose address find in another column, will have vacant dates after April 26.

VENUS AND ADONIS, the juvenile specialty artists, have a card in our advertising department.

JENNIE HUGHES is extensively billed to positively appear at Fox's American Theatre, Philadelphia, on March 29, after having failed to appear as announced at the Grand Central Theatre in that city the week previously, on account of alleged sickness. Col. T. Allston Brown has sent a telegram to the manager of the Grand Central Theatre, stating, as the agent of Jennie Hughes, that she will stay at the latter establishment, commencing April 12, March 27 at no other time in Philadelphia prior to that date.

ED. BANKER, comedian, and Mlle. Leslie, danseuse, made their first appearance at Miller's Winter Garden, Philadelphia, on March 22, Banker taking the position of stage-manager.

MRS. C. SAGE can be engaged for her specialty of musical glass a. Her performances are favorably spoken of by Canadian journals, extracts from which and her address are published in another column.

THE WESTON SISTERS—Flora and Jennie—are now performing at Mitchell's Theatre Comique, St. Louis, Mo., and they state that other ladies in the profession who have assumed their name have no right to it.

VARIETY ARTISTS are advertised for by C. Burnham, manager of the Carrolton Comique, Fall River, Mass., which opens on April 5 for the Spring season.

MONZERT SISTERS, song-and-dance artists, vocalists, etc., can be engaged by addressing as per card.

THE WEEK JUST ENDED, being the strictest one of Lent, has caused a general dullness in amusements at Fall River, Mass., both the Opera-house and the Novelties being almost empty. The former place closes its season March 27; which season, by the way, lasting from November 1, '74, has been a financial failure. A benefit was tendered to Col. Jerry Sullivan, an old sporting man of the city, March 26, on which occasion the house was about half filled. In addition to the regular company, Jimmy Lynch gave a neat jig, and Fred and Annie McAvoy appeared in an original sketch entitled "Kathleen."

.....The Novelties, which will be the only place open next (this) week, announces the following people: Jimmy Carroll, Sullivan and Ryan, and also two new aspirants for honor on the horizontal bar—Maurice Dahill and Patsy Sullivan—who have been hard at work for some months past in preparing for their debut. Departures 27, Dave Mack and Eldie Jerome.....The Carrolton Comique reopens April 5. Company not yet announced. Letter of March 27.

THE NEW ADELPHI, Chicago, Ill., has had no evidence of a business nature that 'tis Holy Week. Big houses have ruled since our last report. Stetson's play of "Neck and Neck" has proved quite popular. The acting of Sam Piercy, T. J. Langdon and Ada Langdon, who play the respective parts of Jim Johnson, Curtis Pumpkin and Jennie, is worthy of particular notice. Miss Ella Hunt looks nice as Cora, and in time will give good satisfaction as an actress. The only new people in the olio are Barney Reynolds and Lizzie Shelton, who have given evidence of popularity. The Lillian Sisters have fallen out with the "gods," and some unpleasant "chaffing" has occurred. On March 29 Frank E. Aiken appears as Bob Brierly in "The Ticket-of-leave Man." The Boisset Family of gymnasts also return. Two ladies' nights will be given. Advices of March 26.

AT THE ADELPHI, Albany, N. Y., the fresh appearances on March 22 were Bernardo and W. H. Morton, Walter Gale, Marco and Adelaide Miller. Bernardo and Morton performed a couple of musical sketches in a clever manner, and speedily became popular. Walter Gale achieved fair success in character and motto songs, and Marco—who proved to be a supple contortionist—gave several difficult feats very neatly. Adelaide Miller, a plump, very good-looking lady, richly costumed, sang several serio-comic songs, which met with favor. King of Aubrey and King did not close March 20 as previously announced, but has appeared during the week in aerial acts in conjunction with his partner. Henshaw and Evans, who are favorites, have been re-engaged for another week. Those closing 27 are Frank and Carrie Lavarnie, who go to Providence; Morton and Bernardo, to the Odeon, Newark; La Belle Pauline and Ida Morton, to New Haven. Billed to open 29: The Henri Family—three in number—G. Lewis McGuire, the Weston Sisters and Mlle. Lea, pantomimist. Business fair. Letter of March 27.

DETROIT, MICH., was plentifully supplied with variety entertainments during the past week, the Theatre Comique and Opera-house both offering inducements to the amusement-loving people. At the Comique, March 22, five new 'uns came. The Reynolds Brothers, in their 'teeter' act, took the audience by storm. The La Verde Family were very good, Lillie and Minnie displaying talents rarely seen in misses so young. Closing March 27 are Reynolds Brothers for Indianapolis, Ella Arnold and Annie Delorme for East Saginaw. The forces on March 29 will be increased by the London Comique, the ladies night at the Adelphi, every Saturday, is gaining favor, the attendance being very large..... The Ware Combination opened a week's season March 22 at the Opera-house to a large audience, the prices being within the reach of all—ten, fifteen, thirty and fifty cents. Mrs. Ware was, as usual, very taking, the boys joining in the chorus of her songs. Valentine Vox (?) gave ventriloquial acts that were fair. Logrenia and his pets were the admiration of young and old. The card of the evening was Cool Burgess and his negro eccentricities. The company will make a tour through the State for a week or two, if business warrants it. Advices of March 26.

AT THE OPERA-HOUSE, Petersburg, Va., there are no fresh arrivals this week. Maggie Warren, who left for Baltimore, and Lottie Arnett, for Richmond, closed March 27. Lizzie Johnson and Frankie Bennett, who are now performing there, will hereafter be known as the Johnson Sisters.

EDWIN LANGE, after a three months' season as manager of the Academy of Music in Grand Rapids, Mich., with varying success, retired on March 22. Of the company, Johnny Nielan and Blanche Gertrude go to Chicago; Nat Blossom and Kitty Burnette to East Saginaw; Dora Bishop and H. B. Fleming remain behind, and the building refitted, remodeled and with new scenery added, is to be opened March 30 by Harry Cordova & Co. The company engaged for the opening is the Cool Burgess party, consisting of Cool Burgess, Mr. and Mrs. George Ware, Prof. Logrenia, Prof. Fox, five; and Lou and Olivia Parento, Seagrave, Gibbons, George W. Murray, Kate Morris, Kate Harvey, Lillie Hillis and Mlle. Bird-and-Sharp. Prof. Wilkinson will lead the orchestra, and Hubbard and Barker furnish the brass. The company will play March 29 at Power's Opera-house, and then open the new hall. Advices of March 25.

MAY FRANKS, Gus. Shaw, Frank Jones, De Witt Cooke and Tommy Cahill appeared at the Theatre Comique, Cleveland, O., March 22. Miss Franks does a good song-and-dance. De Witt Cooke, of whom we have before spoken in high terms, swings clubs in an artistic manner. Gus Shaw's original vocalisms met with approbation. Frank Jones' musical freaks are marked by originality, and he nightly responded to four or five encores. The departures 27 are Frank Jones to Jersey City, and Laura Bernard to join a circus at Cincinnati. Business fair. B. C. Hart has a benefit to-night, and the house is packed from top to bottom, and many turned away. Dated March 27.

THE QUEEN'S THEATRE, Toronto, under the management of O. W. Blake, has been doing well. Palmer's (Detroit) "Black Crook" party appeared during the past week. The scenery was fair, and the march-dresses were particularly fine. Andy Showers' trained dogs and monkeys proved quite an attraction. Arrivals Easter Monday: H. W. Eagan, Jennie Eagan, Josie Farron, Harry Thorne and Hank West.

SPECIALTY ARTISTS are wanted by P. Arnold, who can furnish a selection of songs upon application to his theatrical agency. He also advertises to fit applicants for the variety stage.

TALENT is wanted at the Columbia Varieties, S. Brooklyn, N. Y., now run by W. B Smith, with Den Howe as stage-manager, the company during the past week consisted of the Daleys—Tommy, Willie and Viney—song-and-dance and triple clog; Miss Rena Florence, balladist; Charles Vincent, comedian; Miss Annie Arnetti, serio-comic; Charles Whiting, negro comedian; Miss Kitty Whitland, song-and-dance; J. S. Murphy, Dutch and Irish comedian; the Waite Sisters in burlesque sketches and character duets; Marie Jasper, protean actress; Den Howe and Lillie Howe, Dutch specialists and comedians. The Waite Sisters conclude March 27, and open in Providence, R. I.

MIKE GALLAGHER, "guide" and specialty artist, etc., lately with Flaherty's Mirror of Ireland, will be at liberty after April 13. See card.

HARRY OSBORNE, comedian and vocalist, is open for engagements for the Summer season. Managers are referred to his card elsewhere.

THE CLARK BROTHERS commence a three weeks' engagement at the Vaudeville Theatre, Louisville, Ky., on March 29.

KIRCHHOFF AND McBRIDE, Dutch and Irish specialty artists, desire an engagement, and can be addressed as per card.

PETER AND WHITE, song-and-dance performers, are to commence an engagement in Cleveland, O., April 5.

AT THE VARIETIES, Norfolk, Va., Minnie Lee and Little Della began engagements on March 22.

GUY LINTON and Lucy Adams, vocalists, dancers and s
